New plates may be OK, but save old

A Herald Staff Report
Written by Bill Hill

Depending on where you're driving, it may be OK to have your car wearing the new green and white 1977 license plates.

But don't throw the old Bicentennial ones away yet; some guy in blue may order you to put them back on.

Most Northwest suburban police chiefs have decided to make the best of a confusing situation and not issue tickets to Illinois motorists for displaying 1977 license plates early. The Illinois State Police decided last week that it is legal for motorists to change to the new plates, but Sec. of State Michael Howlett insists the deadline for switching is still Dec. 1.

THE ONLY alternatives most local police chiefs see available to them is to look the other way when cars with the green-and-white 1977 plates go by, or stop them and ask drivers to change back to the red, white and blue until Dec. 1.

It is unlikely that citations will be issued.

"When they do things like this, they only create confusion and put the people in the middle," said Des Plaines Police Chief Arthur Hintz, who says his department will adopt an "educational and warning" approach. "With all this confusion, we won't issue tickets," he said.

The one million sets of license plates already mailed by Howlett's office include a notice that they cannot be used before Dec. 1. This has been the procedure for as long as Howlett's spokesmen can remember.

Teen-age mothers receive help

by SHERYL JEDLINSKI

Barbara's son was born the day after her 18th birthday, and it has been them against the world ever since.

Her husband deserted her when she was five months pregnant — the last time she received any money or heard from him. She got her divorce without ever talking to him about it.

Her son is 14 months old and lives with Barbara and her grandmother in Arlington Heights. Barbara earns $82 a week babysitting and cleaning house in Barrington, and somehow they make it from week to week.

THE HOSPITAL BILLS for having him still are unpaid, but Barbara sends the hospital installments whenever she can. If she needs a new pair of shoes or if she needs glasses, ends just don't meet that month.

Life has been somewhat easier for Barbara's friend, Maria, who also got pregnant at 17, but chose to give her baby up for adoption rather than keep him herself.

Unmarried, she feared her baby would be severely diabetic like his father and she wouldn't be able to afford insulin for him. She envisioned herself working all day, paying a babysitter most of her earnings and then having no time left for either the baby or herself.

A few months after she gave up her baby, Maria met her husband. Now at 19 she has a 4-month-old daughter and lives in a comfortable apartment with a man who was willing to forget her past and start fresh.

ALTHOUGH BARBARA and Maria chose different solutions to the same problem, both believe they did right by themselves and their babies. They say they wouldn't have been as prepared to make the choice without the aid of classes for pregnant teen-agers offered by high school districts 211 and 214.

The classes are a local response to the growing national problem of teenage pregnancies. In the past 15 years, the number of live babies born to mothers under 16 rose 75 per cent, from 26,000 in 1960 to 45,000 in 1974, according to a report by the National Foundation-March of Dimes.

For teen-age mothers like Barbara who decide to keep their babies, loneliness and finances are constant problems.

Barbara applied for welfare, but was told she didn't qualify. They said she would have to reduce her $2,500 life insurance policy to $1,000 if she wanted to be eligible, but she refused.

"I HAD NO SAVINGS account and the life insurance policy was the only security I had for my son," she says. "As it is, it isn't much security."

She often thinks about going after a better paying job, but worries if she found one she'd have to leave the boy in someone else's care and she doesn't want to do that. Watching her son grow is her life right now and she goes almost nowhere without him.

Social occasions don't come up often, however, and loneliness plagues her even more than finances. She has matured too fast for girls her own age, but at 19, it'll be another two years before she's old enough to join Parents Without Partners or Young Single Parents.

"You become a nowhere person," Barbara says. "Where can you go to meet other single teen-age parents?"

Sometimes Barbara wonders if it wouldn't have been better for both herself and her baby if she had had the courage to give him up for adoption. He'd have two parents rather than one.

DESPITE THE LONELINESS, the financial problems and the overwhelming sense of responsibility associated with being a single teen-age parent, 19-year-old Barbara says she would not give up her 14-month-old son for the world.

$9-million widening

Road project to begin in spring

The $9 million widening of Arlington Heights Road between Rand Road and University Drive and the triangle formed by Palatine, Arlington Heights and Rand roads will begin this spring, Arlington Heights village engineer Allen J. Sander said Monday.

The cost of the project has increased to an estimated $9 million because storm sewer installation has been included, Sander said.

The federal government will pay 70 per cent of the total cost and the state and Cook County will each pay 15 per cent.

Bids will be accepted in January or February and the project will take about two years to complete, Sander said.

THE PROJECT, when first proposed, was estimated to cost $1.5 million but only called for the widening of Arlington Heights Road from Rand Road to University Drive, near the village's north boundary. Except for this section, Arlington Heights Road is a four-lane thoroughfare in Arlington Heights from the Northwest Tollway to Dundee Road.

The village and governmental agencies involved then agreed the three intersections formed by Rand, Palatine and Arlington Heights roads should be improved to alleviate the traffic jams now occurring there. The additional cost was estimated at about $3 million.

Design plans call for the widening of Palatine and Rand roads to six lanes with full turn lanes and fully coordinated stoplights.

Other improvements include a full storm drainage system along north Arlington Heights Road, a sodium vapor light system on the three roads and the installation of sidewalks to fill gaps near Rand Junior High School, 2530 N. Arlington Heights Rd.

Stoplights also will be installed at four intersections in the area: on Arlington Heights Road at the entrances to Rand Junior High School and the Northpoint Shopping Center and on Rand Road at the entrances to the Korvette's Shopping Center and the Northpoint Shopping Center.

Reading focus of Dist. 21 events

"Motivation to Read" is the theme of Wheeling-Buffalo Grove Dist. 21's activities honoring American Education Week, Nov. 15-19.

A workshop for parents on "What Parents Should Look for in Children's Literature" will be conducted at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the cafeteria of Buffalo Grove High School, 1101 W. Dundee Rd., Buffalo Grove. Bill Halleran, an educational consultant, will teach parents to choose better books and develop techniques to motivate children to read.

Reservations for this workshop may be made by contacting Irving School Principal Dennis Carpenter, at 394-2212.

SCHOOLS IN ARLINGTON HEIGHTS will sponsor the following programs during American Education Week:

• Riley School, 1209 Burr Oak Dr., will ring a bell at least twice during the week, signaling a time when everyone stops what they are doing to read a book.

• Poe School, 2800 N. Highland Ave., will offer information about its motivational activities in the library.

Parents of primary students are invited to visit from 1 to 2 p.m. Tuesday. Parents of intermediate students may visit from 1 to 2 p.m. Thursday.

• Cooper Junior High School, 1050 W. Plum Grove Rd., Buffalo Grove, has invited parents to visit classes during the week.

Omni House gets $28,000 state grant

A $28,000 state grant to expand counseling services for families of adolescents has been awarded to Omni-House Youth Services Bureau.

The grant from the Illinois Law Enforcement Commission will go toward the hiring of a professional family counseling director and a family counselor, Peter Digre, executive director, said. He said $15,000 will be used for Omni-House services to Wheeling Township and $13,000 for services to Vernon Township.

Digre said the grant will "go far to alleviate the problem of scarce funds and more requests for services that we can handle."

Strauss to quit as Democratic Party chief

DALLAS (UPI) — Democratic National Chairman Robert S. Strauss, credited with bringing the party from the defeat of George McGovern in 1972 to Jimmy Carter's victory, said Monday he will leave office Jan. 21.

Strauss, chairman since 1972, called his decision not to seek another term "irrevocable."

"I have done this for four years. I'm tired. I'm ready for some one else to go on."

Strauss said he made the announcement because of constant questions about whether he would continue to serve after Carter takes office.

"IT WAS MY intention before very long to call a meeting of the Democratic National Committee," he said. "The primary purpose of the meeting would be to select a new and different chairman. I had discussed this with Governor Carter and his staff and they agreed."

He said he would not seek a post in the Carter administration. He will return to private life in Dallas, where he is a partner in the law firm of Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer and Field.

Strauss announced his decision at a Dallas press conference, saying it "appeared he had done a job."

"There are many things I can do from the private sector to aid the Carter presidency," Strauss said. "I will

Robert S. Strauss

be helping plan the inauguration Jan. 20."

STRAUSS, 59, said he would help Carter and his aides to fill administration posts.

"The formation of a new administration means the location of several hundred new persons to fill posts."

He said Carter plans "sweeping" changes during his term.

Strauss said he told Carter three days ago he will remain chairman until one day after Carter's inauguration Jan. 20. In early December, he will call a meeting of the national committee to select a new chairman.

He said he would give Carter his recommendation for his successor.

"GOV. CARTER and I agreed that I would remain through the campaign and that after it I would leave," Strauss said.

Strauss said he was not interested in running for governor nor would he seek an office in the Carter administration.

Strauss said 10 days before last Tuesday's election he was worried Carter might not carry Texas. But, he said, Carter's swing through the state during the last days appeared to make the difference in the outcome.

He praised the president-elect as "compassionate, serious and tough-minded." "He also has one tremendous asset outside of a very high IQ. Jimmy Carter just doesn't believe there are any unsolvable problems," Strauss said. "He just believes problems are solvable."

Construction firms named in state suit

Two Northwest suburban construction firms were named in a triple-damage suit filed Monday by the state against 11 Illinois contracting firms accused of rigging bids for work on I-90 in Cook and DuPage counties. Contracting and Material Co., 165 W. Hintz Rd., Wheeling, and Greco Contractors Inc., 6110 N. River Rd., Rosemont, were named in a similar case last February. Illinois Atty. Gen. William Scott said Monday the state could recoup "well over $1 million" if all 11 firms are found guilty. The suit charges the firms "fixed, maintained and established at high, artificial and noncompetitive levels" the price of highway building. As a result, the state lost money, Scott said, and the courts should return that illegal gain from the contractors to the state. In January, Scott said, Contracting and Material entered a plea of nolo contendere — being subject to conviction without pleading guilty — on federal charges similar to the state case. Officials from Contracting and Material, and Greco were unavailable for comment Monday night.

Shooting death probe continues

Arlington Heights and Chicago police Monday were still trying to piece together the clues in connection with the shooting death of a 19-year-old Chicago woman whose scantily clothed body was found Saturday in an elementary school parking lot in Arlington Heights. A Chicago police official said Monday night that Marcella T. McGee, 11131 S. Union St., Chicago, was last seen alive getting into a car near the South Side Chicago hairdressing salon where she worked. Witnesses told police a man and woman were in the auto but police have not said if they have identified the names of the two people in the car. Miss McGee's body was found at 7 a.m. in the parking lot of Park School, 308 W. Park St. Police believe Miss McGee was shot once in the head and driven to Arlington Heights where her body was dumped. Results of an autopsy are expected today.

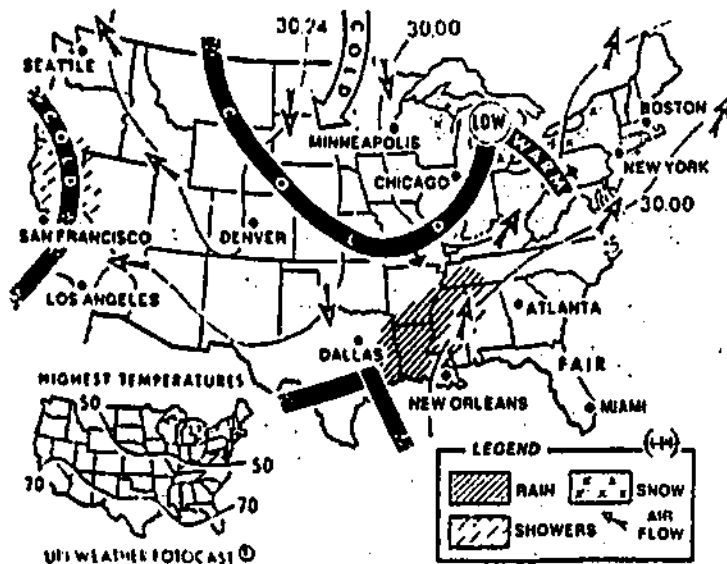

Judge OKs fund drive request

A Chicago environmental group has won its legal battle with the City of Rolling Meadows to conduct a door-to-door fund drive. Federal Judge Prentice H. Marshall Monday approved an agreement allowing Citizens for a Better Environment to apply for a city solicitation permit. The city's license committee refused to consider the group's permit application a year ago, prompting the suit. Rolling Meadows was among 19 suburbs sued by the group. Others include Palatine and Schaumburg. Ald. William Ahrens, 2nd, chairman of the license committee when it refused to consider the group's application, said the panel at that time feared the city would be over-run with out-of-town solicitors.

Road widening to cost $9 million

A $9 million program to widen Arlington Heights Road from Rand Road to University Drive along with the triangle formed by Palatine, Arlington Heights and Rand roads will begin this spring, Village Engineer Allen J. Sander said Monday. Sander said the project's cost has been increased to $9 million because it now includes storm sewer installation. Seventy per cent of the project will be paid by the federal government. The state and Cook County will each pay 15 per cent. Bids will be accepted in January or February and the project will take at least two years to complete, Sander said.

Ruling delayed on 10th District absentee votes

Resolution of the up-for-grabs 10th Congressional District race between Abner Mikva and Samuel Young was delayed again Monday by a Cook County Circuit Court judge.

The latest delay will hold up completion of the official county vote canvass.

Cook County Clerk Stanley Kuser confirmed Monday that Circuit Court Judge Joseph Schneider's decision to delay until Wednesday a ruling on whether undelivered absentee ballots should be counted in the Mikva-Young contest will put off the official canvass and certification of the Nov. 2 results.

THE DELAY, sought by Young's attorneys, came on the heels of a surprise announcement an hour earlier by the original judge, Helen F. McGillicuddy, who disqualified herself from the proceedings.

Judge McGillicuddy was to have heard arguments in the lawsuit brought by Kuser Friday in an attempt to resolve the dispute over whether absentee ballots not delivered by the clerk's office to some precincts should be included in the final vote totals.

The judge at the beginning of the proceedings said she could not hear the matter because she is a member of the class named in the suit, namely Democratic and Republican candidates on the ballot in Cook County.

Judge McGillicuddy ran as a Democrat for a seat on the Illinois Appellate court.

SHE REASSIGNED the case to Schneider who, after hearing more than 30 minutes of arguments from attorneys representing Mikva, Young and Kuser, granted the 48-hour delay requested by Young's attorney Perry Fuller.

Young is seeking to have denied Kuser's request to count some 2,669 undelivered absentee ballots, while Mikva has asked that all absentee ballots sent to the county clerk's office be counted.

Unofficial totals from Kuser's office give Mikva a 201-vote margin over Young in a close contest that has changed leaders almost daily since Tuesday's election.

In the past two contests between the two candidates, in 1972 and 1974, absentee votes went strongly for Mikva and helped him take the congressional seat from Young in 1974.

KUSER SAID MONDAY the official vote canvass could have begun today, but will now have to wait the outcome of court proceedings.

"We have to wait," he told The Herald. "These ballots, if they're counted, relate to all the races from the president on down in a number of precincts. We have to pull back and wait."

Kuser had told Schneider during testimony that he believes state law requires certification of an election within 20 days of the balloting.

In a packed courtroom, Kuser said that while "Haste is no substitute for justice," he "must urge the court" to proceed in the matter because "ballots must be counted."

JOHN TUCKER, an attorney representing Mikva, also objected to Fuller's request for a delay, saying that when attorneys for Mikva and Young met Kuser Thursday to discuss the lawsuit, they agreed to be prepared to proceed quickly.

"I think Mr. Young has had more than adequate notice to be prepared, if not today then tomorrow," Tucker said.

But Fuller said time is no longer a crucial factor in the matter. "If we invade the ballot box we are going to disenchant a great many citizens with respect to how elections are conducted in this county," he said. "I raise that only because we should be enormously concerned with how we proceed."

Kuser said the 10th Congressional race is the closest of any in the county. He said in addition to Mikva and Young several other candidates involved in close races were notified of Monday's scheduled hearing.

They included candidates in the 5th Legislative District and two judges seeking retention, Joseph Power and Chester J. Strzalka.

In addition, Kuser also notified U.S. Atty. Samuel Skinner, U.S. House Speaker Carl Albert, D-Okla., House Minority Leader John Rhodes, R-Ariz., and House Majority Leader Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass. The congressional leaders were briefed because final certification of congressional races comes from the House.

week when the Illinois State Police Dept. announced that a Nov. 1 deadline would be followed because Howlett failed to officially notify the state police of any change from the state statute.

The statute sets Nov. 1 as the first date for displaying new license plates, "unless the Sec. of State selects another date."

George Kreker, a Howlett aide, said the decision by the state police was a surprise.

KREKER SAID the Dec. 1 deadline is preferred for law enforcement purposes. "If they put them on before then it doesn't give our computer time to file all 1 million we've sent out, which makes it difficult for law enforcement," he said.

KREKER WARNED Illinois residents who have changed to the new plates to save the 1976 plates until Dec. 1.

"We're giving them warnings telling them to remove the new plates and keep their old ones," said Mount Prospect Police Chief Ralph J. Donoy.

Elk Grove Village Police Chief Harry P. Jenkins said he would like to ticket drivers with the new plates on their vehicles, but won't because of the confusion.

Palatine, Wheeling, Rolling Meadows and Hoffman Estates police departments also will comply with the Dec. 1 rule by giving warnings, but will not issue citations.

Police chiefs in Arlington Heights, Buffalo Grove and Schaumburg said cars wearing 1977 plates before Dec. 1 will not be stopped.

If you were a burglar, which house would you burgle?

Unlighted houses are burglars' favorite targets; so for reasons of security alone, exterior lighting makes sense for homeowners.

Perhaps the most effective protection comes from floodlights which can bathe large areas in light. These can be arranged to spotlight passageways or penetrate the darkest corner of your property, and can be automatically or manually controlled inside your house.

Other forms of outdoor lighting do more than just protect. Post lights on front and back walkways discourage unwanted visitors and make walks and stairs safer. Low-voltage garden lights provide good lighting and beautify your landscaping as well.

Exterior lighting is a real bargain when you consider all the security, safety, and beauty you get for just a few dollars. And since energy consumption goes way down at night, you won't be contributing to any energy shortages. Commonwealth Edison has a large reservoir of nighttime power which is rarely tapped.

To learn more about what lighting can do for you, see your lighting dealer, hardware or department store.

Heart attack self-help device developed

by KURT BAER

A Maryland doctor has come up with a device that allows heart attack victims to administer emergency first aid to themselves after a quick telephone call to their doctor.

The system consists of a battery-powered component no bigger than a pack of cigarettes that enables a person to quickly transmit his electrocardiogram over the telephone to a doctor and a self injector filled with a drug suppresses irregular heartbeats.

The emergency heart treatment package was developed after eight years of research by Dr. Stanley Sarnoff, chairman of Survival Technology Inc., Bethesda, Md.

The system was just approved by the Food and Drug Administration and costs about $350.

Here is how it works:

A physician prescribes the device to a patient with a high risk of having a heart attack.

The patient carries the heart monitoring device, called a CardioBeeper, and two drug injectors about the size of a fountain pen.

If the patient feels chest pain that indicates a heart attack, he or someone with him, takes out the CardioBeeper, puts two electrodes under his armpits, telephones his doctor and transmits his heart beat signals to heart monitoring equipment in the doctor's office.

If an irregular heart beat shows up, the doctor can tell the patient to administer a shot of Lidocaine, a drug used in hospitals for patients with heart beat irregularities.

The drug is self-administered by removing a safety cap and ramming the injector tube into the thigh, through clothing and all.

The FDA approved the use of the self-injector, called a LidoPen, for use only by patients whose electrocardiogram shows they are having cardiac arrhythmia. Three out of four heart attack victims have such irregularities.

Dr. Stanley Zydlow, chief of emergency medicine at Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, said CardioBeepers can help a doctor in suspected heart attack cases. But he said the electrical signals also can be deceptive under certain circumstances.

For instance, in a condition known as "electromechanical dissociation," the CardioBeeper will transmit the electrical impulse of a heart beat even though the actual muscle contraction which causes the blood to flow is not occurring," he said.

"Beepers can help if there is somebody there that knows how to use them," Zydlow said.

"But the biggest reason heart attack patients die is that they put off calling their doctor or coming to the hospital after the heart attack. They rationalize it as indigestion, or something else that is going to go away, when they should have been instructed to understand the warning signs," he said.

Some 600,000 persons die of heart attack in the United States each year. The emergency heart treatment package is aimed at helping some of the 350,000 heart attack victims who die before they ever reach a hospital.

The new self-help systems will be introduced at the American Heart Association's meeting in Miami on Nov. 14.

Schools offer pregnant teens aid

by SHERYL JEDLINSKI
First of a two-part series

They come because they are frightened and they need to talk to someone.

In many cases, their boyfriends have left them, their parents are hurt and angry with them and their girlfriends can't understand what they're going through.

Pregnant, unmarried and still in their teens, they have nowhere to turn for counseling and comfort except high school programs for expectant mothers.

HERE, THEY are emotionally and physically prepared for childbirth, they are told their legal rights and responsibilities as pregnant adolescents and they are helped to plan for their futures and the futures of their babies.

"We try to get them to stop feeling sorry for themselves, accept what's happened to them and make the best of it," says Karen Uhren, co-teacher of the High School Dist. 214 parent-hood seminar. "We want them to come out of the experience a better person. It's the whole idea of 'when life hands you a lemon, make lemonade'."

Some 40 students, ranging in age from 14 to 18, annually enroll in the parent-hood seminar and in the High School Dist. 214 Preparation for Life Class. They stay for varying lengths of time, but neither program usually handles more than 10 students at a time.

Some girls choose to continue attending their regular high school classes almost until the day they deliver while others prefer to have tutors come to their homes or to attend night school.

HONOR STUDENTS, student council presidents and cheerleaders are as likely to become pregnant as anyone else, teachers say.

Slightly more than half the girls choose to keep their babies rather than give them up for adoption or place them in foster homes, but few marry the father of their baby. Abortion usually has been ruled out before the girls enroll in the programs, teachers say.

No one solution is encouraged by the teachers. They urge the girls to explore all the available options and choose the one that best meets their individual needs.

"There seems to be an enormous pressure to solve the problem immediately," says Mary Anderson, co-teacher of the Preparation for Life Class. "The ability to make wise choices is limited, though, when you're under stress."

TO HELP the girls make an educated choice, teachers "bombard" them with as much information as possible. Representatives from adoption agencies, the March of Dimes, Planned Parenthood and Crossroads Clinic visit the classes along with alumni who have already made their choices and can tell the girls what it's like to live with the decisions afterwards.

Those who kept their babies and did not marry talk about the loneliness, the financial problems and the overwhelming sense of responsibility that goes with being a single parent.

Those who gave their babies up for adoption talk about the guilt feelings and the sense of loss they experienced and note how they will always wonder what became of their babies.

The realities of motherhood are brought home to the girls through discussions of child care, child development, child rearing and family living.

THE CLASSES also strive to reduce the high risks associated with adolescent pregnancies and to ensure the health and safety of mothers and babies.

What to do with the baby? Barb kept it, Maria didn't then just one and would have all the luxuries she can't afford to give him. She could have gone to college, met people and studied a variety of interesting subjects.

All of this was pointed out to her by the teachers in High School Dist. 214's parent-hood seminar when her husband first ran off, but she couldn't bring herself to give her baby up.

For Maria, picking up the pieces meant starting over and giving her baby up for adoption. She agonized over her decision for eight months, but was convinced it was best after talking to a counselor from the Cradle Society adoption agency in Evanston.

STILL, WHEN HER baby was born and she heard his cry, she couldn't help but have second thoughts about giving him up.

"His cry was the greatest thing in the world to me," she says.

The doctor refused to tell her anything about the baby — not its sex, its weight or its condition. She didn't find out she had had a boy until she was asked to check over his birth certificate.

MARIA DIDN'T think she would be able to sign the adoption papers, but the agency counselor visited her in the hospital and convinced her otherwise. She told her she already had a good home lined up for the baby and that the husband was a computer programmer.

"It meant a new beginning for all of us and that was what I really wanted," she says.

As happy as Maria is now with her husband and small daughter, she will never forget her first baby. She will always wonder what he looks like, how he's getting along, what kind of person he is and whether he is loved by his parents.

"It's strange to think I could walk down the street, bump into him and never even know it," she says. "It'll always hurt, but every day it hurts a little bit less."

Mayors to Carter: send us money

The U.S. Conference of Mayors meeting in Chicago Monday asked Jimmy Carter to "set a national tone of concern for urban America" by providing federal money for inner city jobs and guaranteeing city dwellers protection from recession.

The request emerged from a two-day meeting of 100 mayors who put together a package of five priorities they want the president-elect to consider for urban areas.

Mayor Kenneth Gibson of Newark, president of the conference, sent Carter a telegram asking for a meeting as soon as possible to discuss the proposals. He said he couldn't put a price tag on them.

"To say the mayors have asked for a multibillion dollar package . . . would be quite unfair," Gibson said. "It's fair to say we're talking about programs that cost a lot of money."

The five priority areas the mayors listed were: creation of jobs in central cities; development of a new national urban policy that would consolidate existing grant programs; pumping additional federal money into cities; setting up an "urban antirecession program"; and creating an urban development bank similar to the World Bank with loans going to private businesses and local governments.

"We call upon the Carter administration to set a national tone of concern for urban America," Gibson said. "In the 1960s, President Johnson set a tone in calling for civil rights for all Americans . . . we ask the new Carter administration for this kind of commitment to the nation's cities."

Among specific goals developed by the conference was a plan to put more federal money into the economy each time unemployment rises substantially.

Under the proposal, which would have to be approved by Congress and Carter to be effective, $1 billion in federal funds would be distributed for each 1 per cent increase in unemployment above 5 1/2 per cent.

The conference also called for creation — again through new legislation — of an urban development bank which would give low interest loans to business and cities for investment in inner cities.

The mayors said they haven't developed a timetable for their goals but they want to meet with Carter quickly to discuss the proposals.

"We hope he will act in accordance with these priorities," said Mayor Coleman Young of Detroit. But he added, "I'd hate to attempt to spell out for the president-elect what he should do first."

NEW YORK MAYOR Abraham Beame, left, and Howard C. Samuels, President-elect Jimmy Carter's representative, listen to proceedings at Mayors conference in Chicago.

IF AMY CARTER'S parents keep their word and send her to public school, the neighborhood school she is most likely to attend is Stevens, this blue and buff-colored brick building five and a half blocks from the White House.

Amy to enroll in 1st black school in capital

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A seven-room schoolhouse painted blue and buff, built in 1868 as Washington's first school for the children of freed slaves, looks forward to enrolling Amy Carter in January.

President-elect Jimmy Carter said last week he would enroll his 9-year-old daughter in the public school system if security considerations permit. Stevens, 5 1/2 blocks from the White House, is the closest elementary school.

Opened in 1868 as the city's first school for black children, it is named for Thaddeus Stevens, a thundering antislavery congressman.

Amy would be the first president's child to attend public school in Washington since Theodore Roosevelt sent his son, Quentin.

The capital's school system, about 95 per cent black, is a troubled one. But the children appear happy to put in a school day nearly 11 hours long.

Stevens has 215 pupils. About 60 per cent are black, 30 per cent Oriental or Hispanic, 10 per cent white. Many are from nearby embassies. Youngsters from 26 countries are enrolled.

Most pupils qualify for free or reduced-price breakfasts and lunches, but one pre-kindergarten pupil is from a family wealthy enough to live in the Watergate.

Mrs. Jane Harley, school counselor, predicts the children would adjust to the Secret Service men who might accompany Amy to school.

"Kids take those things in stride," she says. Under Mrs. Harley, Stevens offers an extended day which keeps the children of working parents busy until 6 p.m., when they can be picked up.

After school, children as young as 3 study ballet, gymnastics, sewing, carpentry, photography, music and dramatics.

High school and college students do the instructing, and are paid with funds from federal and local youth programs. A retired carpenter teaches 30 children, who have made tables and shelves for the school.

The extended day program is so attractive a few working parents from Virginia and Maryland pay tuition to the District of Columbia so their children can participate.

Stevens' enrollment dropped over the years as the little houses of Foggy Bottom once occupied by freed slave families became fashionable, high-priced "townhouses" or were replaced by office and apartment buildings.

Out of budget considerations, age groups are mixed, with older children expected to help their juniors.

Mrs. Lydia Williams, principal at Stevens, says that while no one expects Jimmy Carter to join the PTA, teachers are excited the President will have a chance to learn first-hand the problems of an urban school system.

Country singer Tammy Wynette stricken in London

Country music entertainer Tammy Wynette collapsed and was hospitalized in London early Monday and her former husband, George Jones, flew to her bedside. The 32-year-old singer, who divorced Jones last year then married and is divorcing real estate salesman J. Michael Tomlin, was admitted to Westminster Hospital for treatment of acute bronchitis. Hospital officials said Miss Wynette would be "staying several days." It is the sixth time in as many months that Miss Wynette has been hospitalized.

Mrs. Jacqueline Onassis dined and chatted with scores of admirers early Monday at a midnight supper in the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, following a tribute to the late St. Louis-born black singer, Josephine Baker. The former First Lady, gown-ed, in a red one-shoulder Zandra Rhodes gown, was honorary chairman of the Variety Club Foundation's $150-a-ticket benefit along with Princess Grace of Monaco, who did not attend.

Hospital begins worker lay off

Chicago's Cook County Hospital began laying off 250 to 300 employees Monday because of a six-day strike by some 800 registered nurses. With nurses still on the picket line despite a back-to-work order issued by a judge Thursday, hospital officials closed eight wards, including the trauma unit, and ordered layoffs of support personnel.

Dr. James Haughton, executive director of the Cook County Health and Hospitals Governing Commission, said the number of patients in the 1,500-bed hospital was dropped from 1,111 when the strike began to 688, which means less personnel is required. Kathryn Zerzan, first vice president of the nurses' bargaining unit, called the decision to lay off staff "outrageous." "Haughton repeatedly threatens to lay off people when anyone tries to stand up for his or her rights in this hospital," she said.

The main issue is the governing commission's proposal to eliminate sick pay for the first day of any illness. Other items of contention are salary and staffing.

Future millionaire orphan adopted

A circuit court judge Monday approved adoption by an aunt and uncle of Michael Papadopoulos, 11, orphaned four years ago by an auto crash and due to become more than a millionaire when he is 18. "I'm not gonna celebrate, I'm gonna say a prayer (of thanks)," said Michael to newsmen after the verdict in Circuit Court Judge Helen F. McGillicuddy's court.

The boy was orphaned Oct. 18, 1972, by an auto crash that killed his parents, two brothers, and a grandmother. Guardianship was awarded to the aunt and uncle, Katina and Dimitrios Papadopoulos, in 1974. Michael received an insurance settlement of $750,000 from the accident which orphaned him. The fund, in trust, now has grown to $850,000 and trustees expect it to total $1.4 million by the time he is 18.

Lottery chief hits rule change plan

Illinois Lottery Superintendent Ralph Batch Monday said he doesn't like a rule change proposed by the Lottery Control Board, but said he has no intention at this point of resigning over the matter. At issue is a proposal that would require prior board approval on printing and marketing and all details of new lottery games.

Batch said he opposes the plan because it would delay the starting of new games, would erode his prerogatives as superintendent, and would disclose details of new games 60 days before they are to take effect. It was reported Batch would consider resigning if the measure is approved by the board, but he said later Monday he has no intention of quitting at this time. He said if he does decide to resign in the future, he will "do it quietly to the governor." The board plans to hold a public hearing on the proposal Nov. 22.

Record unpaid taxes collected

The Illinois Dept. of Revenue collected $15.4 million in unpaid taxes in the first quarter of fiscal 1977 which began July 1, Director Robert H. Allphin said Monday. Allphin said this is the highest first-quarter collection of delinquent taxes in history. He said the department also has identified another $20.3 million in unpaid taxes. Both figures, higher than during the first three months last year, resulted from increased efficiency of existing revenue workers, Allphin said.

2 seeking posts rap Redmond

Two men who want to become Republican leaders in the Illinois House Monday issued a joint statement criticizing House Speaker William Redmond, D-Bensenville. Reps. William Walsh of La-Grange Park and Philip W. Collins of Calumet City said Redmond, "who has been increasingly prone to ignore House rules," refused two months ago to allow them to verify the vote on a bill in the tax speed-up and school aid series considered at a special session of the legislature.

Collins, although denying the statement was tied to his effort to become GOP minority leader, said it "might be one more example of the leadership qualities Bill and I possess."

Redmond said the pair don't "represent their party if they rant and rave and scream and cry." He also said, "They're a little late."

The bill provided penalties for businessmen who might ignore the tax speed-up measures. Collins and Walsh objected to its passage by filing a formal dissent. Dissents typically are recorded in the House Journal and then forgotten.

15 fires sweep Downstate

Some 15 field and woodland fires pushed by gusty winds charred some 250 acres Sunday in Southern Illinois in the busiest day of the season for state and federal foresters. They warned that the fire danger will remain high until there is a soaking rain to wet down leaves and dried grass. Norman Melvin of the Illinois Conservation Department's 27-county regional office at Benton said state foresters were called out on four or five fires covering some 225 acres. The largest was between Herrin and Johnston City in Williamson County and covered 200 acres, most of it abandoned fields. Jerry Nelson, Harrisburg, fire control officer for the Shawnee National Forest, said there were some seven or eight fires in the forest, the largest covering 15 acres south of Shawneetown in Gallatin County.

Top court to review state case

The U.S. Supreme Court Monday agreed to decide whether Illinois may sue concrete block manufacturers for price-fixing damages involving buildings purchased by the state. The justices will hear arguments later this term in an appeal by the block manufacturers, claiming the state has no right to sue because it purchased only fully constructed buildings rather than the building materials which allegedly were subject to price-fixing.

A federal district court summarily dismissed the state's suit for triple damages under the antitrust laws. But the U.S. Court of Appeals in Chicago ordered a trial on grounds Illinois may be able to prove it suffered financial losses from higher building prices because of the alleged price-fixing. The justices will review the appeals ruling and, if it is affirmed, the state can bring its damage suit to trial.

Walker an honorary Jaycee

Gov. Daniel Walker Monday was installed as an honorary lifetime member of the Jaycees. The Illinois Jaycees voted at their fall meeting to confer the membership in recognition of Walker's support of their projects during this term in office. Walker, 54, is no longer eligible to be a regular member of the Jaycees, which has a cutoff age of 35. He did not belong to the organization during the years he was eligible.

Tom Tully's future at stake

More to tax issue than just facts

by WANDALYN RICE

A news analysis

At the end of the last public hearing on Cook County Assessor Thomas Tully's proposal to lower the tax assessment rate on single-family homes, Jerome Huppert, county board finance committee chairman, finally got irritated.

After hours of testimony against the proposal from worried school officials, Huppert went to Tully's deputy, Theodore Swain, and said, "Your boss comes in and makes these proposals and then we have to sit here and listen to all the complaints. Tom ought to be here and he isn't and that's his big problem."

The irritation Huppert expressed with the county assessor, who is often considered one of the rising young stars of the Democratic Party, is clearly one of the factors which will influence whatever decision the county board eventually makes on Tully's proposal.

OTHER FACTORS which will affect the decision will be the more visible issues — how badly the assessment change will hurt local school districts and whether the county board is convinced it will be blamed for massive property tax increases if it does not approve the proposal.

County board hearings on the subject resume today with all parties understanding a decision one way or the other must be made soon unless tax bills next spring are to be delayed.

Tully's proposal calls for cutting the assessment rate for single-family homes from 22 per cent of market value to 1 per cent. The change is necessary to prevent large tax increases on single-family homes, according to Tully, because inflation has struck the home market so much that assessments may more than double or triple if the assessment rate remains the same.

One thing that is certain about the hearings is the fact that local school officials will continue to oppose the change because they say they have not been given enough information to figure out whether it will cut the amount of property tax they collect.

OFFICIALS in Tully's office have repeatedly assured the school districts they won't be "significantly" hurt by the change, but school officials remain uncertain.

The balancing act which faces the county board between the school officials, who will be upset if the measure is adopted, and the taxpayers, who just may blame the county board, and not Tully, if their taxes increased dramatically because of increased assessments.

In determining which way to move on the proposal, however, the county board also will consider the political factors. On that score, the irritation Huppert and other commissioners feel toward Tully may come into play.

Tully is one of the rising young Irish politicians who is jockeying for power in the Cook County Democratic Party as Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley's position weakens because of his age.

THE PROBLEM IS, around county government and in some county circles, Tully has gotten the reputation for being low and for making the quick grab for headlines without much substance backing him up.

His repeated absences from county board deliberations on his proposal and the fact his only appearance before the board came when television cameras were present seem to confirm this picture.

The Democrats, who make up the majority on the county board, therefore are going to be reluctant to approve Tully's proposal and thus boost his fortunes unless convinced there is real political gain for them, too.

In short, homeowners and school officials may find that a decision on their finances will be made with much more than the objective facts of the case in mind.

The future of a rising young politician is at stake. And that makes the outcome hard to predict.

Labor Party in Britain ekes out vote to survive

LONDON (UPI) — Britain's Labor government Monday won a critical vote in Parliament by a one-vote majority, summoning both sick and "walking wounded" members to turn out for the vote Labor needed to ensure its survival.

A defeat might have resulted in Prime Minister James Callaghan having to resign and order a general election.

The vote on a motion to cut short debate on a controversial government bill to nationalize the aircraft and shipbuilding industries was 311 to 310. The voting was held earlier than expected.

THE GOVERNMENT won two other votes — also to "guillotine" or cut short debate on other nationalization bills — by only slightly larger margins.

It won the first by 312 to 298, and the second by 310 votes to 307.

Conservative opposition members shouted "resign, resign" when results of the third vote were announced. Laborite supporters waved their Commons order papers in triumph.

The government won the third crucial measure as the result of the vote of Frank Maguire, a Republican Independent from Northern Ireland, who is a Labor supporter.

Government whips did not know until the last minute when Maguire flew in from Belfast, if he would be on hand to vote. Maguire has never spoken in the two years he has been a member of Parliament.

ONE LABORITE crippled with sciatica said he would have to be brought in by ambulance on a stretcher.

Mrs. Helene Hayman, 27, also a La-borite and youngest member of Parliament, said she planned to bring her 14-day-old son, Benjamin, to the House so she could vote.

As a result of losing two parliamentary by-elections Thursday, the Labor government's over-all Commons majority has been slashed to a single vote over the 315 total of the combined opposition parties.

However, government officials said they expect to survive. The Conservatives need the support of all the Liberals, Ulster Unionists and Scottish and Welsh Nationalists to come within striking distance of overthrowing the government.

Students need more practical experience: report

by HOLLY HANSON

While local educators adamantly support the idea of sending students into the community to gain practical experience as a necessary part of their education, a U.S. Office of Education report recommending a gradual shortening of the school day received mixed reactions.

"Certainly it isn't an 8-to-4 day anymore," said Roderick McLennan, associate superintendent for instructional services for High School Dist. 214. "But I really don't see how we could change the hours and provide the courses that students want to take."

About 1,000 to 2,000 students participate in Dist. 214's community resource program each year, he said, and each of the district's eight buildings has its own community resources person who places students in a practical setting in the community.

"Every course ought to relate to a career," he said, explaining that chemistry students have gone to Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, to work with chemists there while social studies students have worked with children in local elementary schools.

EVEN HIGH SCHOOL students, who might be expected to look favorably on the chance to spend less time sitting in the classroom, seemed unenthusiastic about the shorter day.

"I like it (school) the way it is," said Prospect High School sophomore Art Granzler. "We're allowed to do that (work in the community) now. Next year, or the year after that, there's an electronics work-study course I can take."

Other students questioned the entire program, asking, "What happens to school activities?" "Would you get to choose a program for yourself?" and "How much homework is there?"

In High School Dist. 207 schools, students have the opportunity to visit local political candidates, tour art museums, perform in choral groups and bands and work with private industries in the community, said Michael Myers, assistant superintendent of instruction.

"People in the community want to help," he said. "But their first priority is to themselves, to earn a living. Then, it's to help the company make a profit." Industries will hire and train students, he said, as long as a succession of student workers helps the business.

"Basically, we support having kids learn in the community, but there has to be a balance," he said. Spending only two to four hours in the classroom "sounds kind of low to me," he said.

INFORMAL VOCATIONAL counseling, career-related clubs and work-study programs help students in High School Dist. 211 learn outside the school, said Gerald Chapman, assistant to the superintendent.

"Each school has a vocational counselor who coordinates a student's interests with someone in the community," he said.

The district also gives students the chance to work with cosmetologists, assist in the early education program in a local elementary district and take physical education classes off-campus "to let them see what opportunities are available," he said.

Although Dist. 211 planned to develop a professional careers program with Dist. 214, which would have allowed students to observe and assist community professionals, a state aid cut forced the program to be cancelled, he said.

"Although there ought to be a way to get more kids out into the community, two to four hours in school — especially two hours — seems less than desirable," Chapman said. "I don't know what they (the U.S. Office of Education) are recommending us to do that we're not doing."

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A new report on education says American high schools have become "social aging vats" in which students spend too much time at academic work and not enough learning to cope with the world outside.

It recommends gradual shifts to classroom days of only two to four hours, freeing students to spend more time at such practical pursuits as observing community government and helping to run their own schools.

"Both as an institution and as a social concept, the American high school will remain the keystone of this nation's educational system," says the 142-page report prepared for the U.S.

Office of Education. "However, it requires orderly reform."

AS IT IS NOW, the report said, high schools "have become social 'aging vats' that have isolated adolescents and delayed their opportunity to learn adult roles, work habits and skills."

The report was prepared by a panel of academicians, researchers, school superintendents and students. It was described as the first comprehensive study of high school education in a decade.

They recommended eventually reducing the length of the high school academic day to two to four hours, starting with seniors and working down to other grade levels as opportunities become available for outside study of the arts, media and other fields.

"A two-to-four-hour day is a necessary concentration of effort by the musician, football player, dancer, politician or scientist," the report said. "The present all-day high school is a costly intruder on this need for both time and program variety."

THE REPORT said students freed of classroom time could, among other things, become part of "a permanent group of citizen volunteers... whose function should be to observe, investigate and to report publicly on all government operations, not as 'citizens' but as concerned citizens."

The report also says the schools should give students the chance to try, and fail, in the art of self-government.

"The schools need to be laboratories for error in learning the roles of citizens," the report said. "This means realistic participation in the operation and management of the school."

"It is the only fail-safe institution available for learning the consequences of neglect, venality and the appeals of power. Studied experiments in such consequences should be part of the schools' curriculum in citizenship," it said.

Officials seek agreement for rock concerts security

Operators of the Randhurst Twin Ice Arena, concert promoters and Mount Prospect officials tonight will try to reach an agreement on security measures to allow one last rock concert in the village by Jan. 12.

The meeting begins at 8 p.m. in the village hall, 106 S. Emerson St. Trustee J. F. Richardson, chairman of the fire and police committee, said the purpose of the meeting is to discuss security requests made in October by Fire Chief Lawrence A. Pairitz and Police Chief Ralph J. Doney.

"We will try to come to terms where our chiefs will be satisfied," Richardson said, "in order to allow another concert or the continuation of concerts at Randhurst."

PAIRITZ AND DONEY have said fire safety standards at the arena and security provided by arena operators

J. Emil Anderson & Son are inadequate.

As a result of a disturbance at an Oct. 10 concert where one Mount Prospect patrolman was injured and several youths were arrested, the chiefs want stepped up security measures.

Arena operators and Blaz Productions, concert promoters in the village since last January, already have said they will terminate their one-year contract Jan. 12. Blaz officials said they have been permitted by J. Emil Anderson to sponsor one last rock performance through mid-January rather than the original three concerts scheduled under contract terms.

A date is expected to be scheduled for the final rock concert if officials tonight can agree to increased security at the arena.

Beware of praise, Jim

It must be heady stuff for Governor-elect James Thompson to read his own press clippings from the past week.

Here he is, completing his first run for elective office, suddenly seeing himself touted by the national press, including Walter Cronkite himself, as the Republican Party's most rapidly rising star.

Commentators are talking about him as a candidate for president in 1980. Political analysts are looking at his more than one million-vote victory margin and proclaiming him the giant killer who slew the Machine of Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley.

In the middle of all this praise, there are a few words of caution we'd like to direct toward the fellow who cheerfully says he was a "rookie" when he started his gubernatorial campaign:

Don't let it go to your head, Big Jim.

The experience of Gov. Daniel Walker, who four years ago was being mentioned nationally as a possible presidential candidate, should clearly indicate the wisdom of caution by Thompson in reading the clippings.

There is, of course, nothing wrong with ambition. After such a stunning electoral victory, if Thompson finds his visions of the White House appearing more frequently than sugar plums in a child's Christmas dreams, he can be forgiven.

However, the state has just gone through four years under a governor who often seemed more conscious of his press notices and his image than of genuine accomplishments. Walker's term in office was marked by battles with the Illinois General Assembly and considerable disillusionment by the voters.

The next two years will see Illinois officials facing up to some of the serious budget problems that are a legacy of the last four years. In addition, the state will face the perennial problems of public aid, education funding and taxation. These problems require leadership, not demagoguery.

The best way for Thompson to fulfill any ambitions he might have for national office will be to supply necessary leadership to the state in the next two years. He should seek counsel from both the public and from officials more experienced than he is in government.

It may be that in 1980 or 1984, Thompson will be Illinois's favorite son in a run for the presidency.

Right now, we'll settle for his becoming a good governor. The state needs that more than it needs a presidential candidate.

Streich should quit library post

Grover A. Streich has been a member of the Elk Grove Village Public Library Board for 14½ years. The record may well show he has made significant accomplishments on behalf of the library.

The recent record, however, shows something else: neglect. Since he was elected to his current six-year term in 1973, Streich has missed 70 per cent of the board's meetings. He missed 16 of the last 17 meetings, and he attended that one apparently only to prevent other members of the board from ousting him. He can be removed only if he misses 12 meetings in a row, and the one meeting he attended broke the string at 11.

Streich cites business obligations as preventing him from attending meetings; other board members have expressed skepticism over his interest. Whether his excuses are for business or personal reasons, they prove, as Streich told The Herald, "You can't split yourself and be in two places at once."

Streich has made his choice of where he wants to be, and he should resign so the board can appoint an active replacement.

Meadows treats rule was a trick on kids

Ever since our government changed our holidays, to make it more convenient for its people, we the people have been confused. We don't care about that holiday, all we want is that three-day weekend.

Rolling Meadows has fallen prey to the same thing this Halloween. The city hall asked that the children go "trick or treating" Saturday instead of Sunday, Halloween. The children went on Saturday only to find many people saying "Come back tomorrow on Halloween." The children who obeyed the ruling of the city got doors closed in their faces. Now the children are confused.

Let's leave the holidays and other days fall where they fall. If they can be moved around for our convenience, then such days are not important enough to celebrate.

Branch banking: A boon or boondoggle in Illinois?

A. Robert Abboud

Ray G. Livasy

Consumers and businesses in Illinois have a big stake in the settlement of the branch banking controversy. Illinois is one of three states where the opening of branch bank offices is barred, even though federal savings and loan associations can branch. Recent court decisions and continued legislative efforts to lift the branching restrictions in Illinois will affect customers' daily financial transactions.

The Herald has asked A. Robert Abboud, chairman of the First National Bank of Chicago, to speak for branch banking; and Ray G. Livasy, president of The Millikin National Bank of Decatur and president of the Illinois Bankers Assn., to discuss arguments against branching.

Question 1: Should some form of branch banking be allowed in Illinois? Why?

ABBOUD:

Illinois needs branch banking, and it needs it now. This state has the most restrictive banking laws in the country — only two other states (West Virginia and Oklahoma) have similar limitations, and they can't compare with Illinois as major population and industrial centers.

This archaic and restrictive legislation is harmful to the economy of the state and is a disservice to the people. Denying banks the ability to branch denies people both job opportunities and the convenience of additional banking facilities.

We rank 49th among the states in the number of bank offices per person; more than 1,500 municipalities in Illinois have no banks at all. In Chicago, particularly, the need is acute. Twelve of the 50 wards have no banks, 13 have only one bank, and 16 have just two banks. Three million people in the area are without banking facilities... and are seriously inconvenienced by Illinois' antiquated banking law.

The crisis of the next ten years will be the crisis of the cities. And cities can't reach their full potential in serving people — in providing jobs, rehabilitating neighborhoods, improving the quality of life — without widespread banking services. A bank in a neighborhood acts as a catalyst, as a loan-maker, job-provider, business-developer. It contributes to a neighborhood's stability. And usually, if a neighborhood is stable and if convenient banking and other services are provided, business stays. Jobs stay.

Branch banking, then, isn't just one issue. It influences many other issues — the most important being the desperate need to maintain and increase employment opportunities.

LIVASY:

In my opinion, no form of branching under discussion in this state should be permitted.

The proponents of branching have not made a case for a change in structure of banking in this state. Proposals have not justified any change. The appeals have been made by the large banks who are advocating branching as a vehicle to pursue objectives of growth beyond the already extremely successful efforts which they have made over the past ten years. In other states where unit banking has been supplanted by branching, the branch banks have eliminated unit banks by acquisitions and by "less than cost" competition with their superior financial resources. The result has been the elimination of competition, not the increase. Where competition is eliminated costs tend to increase. I believe the unit banks have served the needs of this state and region extremely well. Except for an increase in costs of services, I fail to see what branching will achieve. More convenience will simply cost more — not less.

Question 2: Will branch banking affect competition among Illinois financial institutions? How? Among those in the Northwest suburbs?

ABBOUD:

Opponents of branch banking loudly proclaim that it would decrease competition among financial institutions in Illinois. In fact, evidence from other states shows the opposite is true — branching increases competition. New York and California, for example, both permit branch banking. The competition there in the financial services field is vigorous, savings and loans (S&Ls) are numerous and powerful, and the economy of both states is stimulated by modern banking laws. Small local banks are not "driven out" when branching is permitted — many thrive, as do S & Ls, credit unions, and other financial institutions.

Here, by contrast, savings and loan associations can branch but banks cannot — a situation that is both unfair and illogical. Since 1972, 322 savings and loan association offices have opened in Illinois, while only 59 new banks were established in the same period. This, combined with the ability of S & Ls to offer a higher interest rate, have placed all banks at a competitive disadvantage. Multi-office banking would allow all banks to compete with savings and loan associations with multiple locations.

About 25 outside banks have loan production offices in Illinois, including 9 from other states and 16 from foreign countries. They are able to seize opportunities to do business here, while Illinois banks themselves are not.

LIVASY:

Competition would initially be enhanced by branching but the long term results will be the elimination of some financially weaker unit banks. Branching always results in a lesser number of competitors in a market — certainly fewer competitors implies less competition. Less competition implies less competitive costs. It also will mean the elimination of small banks, which in reality are small businesses and the proliferation of giant banks. Those small banks have a greater understanding of small business because, in essence, they share similar problems. Small business people will have a lesser number of banking opportunities in a branching environment than presently — as will individuals.

The Northwest suburbs would certainly feel the impact of branching as the average incomes of residents in this area exceeds those of many other areas in Chicagoland. The large banks want to branch where the dollars exist — not where they are minimal. The large banks' motive is to compete nationally, not in the neighborhood. The vision of the consumer receiving more service at a branch is almost laughable — If the truth weren't so painful. Service as outlined in the big "black book" is different than that provided by a bank's staff which realizes it needs to serve to survive.

Question 3: Would branching make any difference to the consumer in the availability and cost of financial services?

ABBOUD:

Branch banking will bring needed financial services to the places where people want them, and will reduce the cost of "substitute" services. For example, one effect of the scarcity of banking facilities here is the high cost of currency exchanges. A recent survey of 19 Chicago currency exchanges showed that a person must pay an average of $10.23 a month for services that would be free at many banks. That comes to $122.76 a year, or more than $600 over five years — a considerable amount for those on fixed incomes or tight budgets.

The perpetuation of the present banking system in Illinois is an implicit tax on the consumer through higher costs and reduced services. Evidence developed in a study by the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago shows that a large number of banking offices in an area tends to (1) lower the interest rates charged for loans, (2) raise the interest payments on deposits; and (3) lower service charges.

The scarcity of banks in populated areas in Illinois, especially in Chicago, is grossly wasteful and does not serve the public interest. We recently were forced to close our community offices, two of which were in Arlington Heights and Deerfield. Among other functions, these offices served to produce loans. In closing them, the law said in effect, "A bank shouldn't make loans; a bank shouldn't contribute to the community."

That's how ridiculous the situation has become in Illinois.

LIVASY:

Branching is more expensive than unit banking because an existing bank cannot afford to abandon any major part of its market area. If one bank locates a branch in a given neighborhood, other banks who derive business from that area must respond with a branch or lose its part of that market. With three or four branches in an area, that might have been profitable for one, the consequences are fairly obvious — none of them will be profitable, but the neighborhood will have great banking convenience. At some point someone will have to pay for the convenience. As in most other like situations — it will be the customer — and normally at the consumer level or the small business level, whether directly or indirectly.

In most analyses of the profit results of Illinois banks — their results are average of banks in the 7th Federal Reserve District. Therefore, if the banks are not extraordinarily profitable, they are not in a position to absorb the costs of branching — and they have two choices — become marginally profitable or pass the costs along. Neither choice will serve the public or the public interest. The specter in this situation seems to me to be the usury statutes in this state. Those states which have branching generally do not have the rather low rate levels which this state has. The implication again is higher rates and higher usury ceilings.

Question 4: What are the prospects for passage of legislation to allow branching in 1977? If such legislation is not adopted, what will be the impact on Illinois banking?

ABBOUD:

As I write this, the voters have not yet chosen their state representatives and senators, so it is difficult to speculate on whether the legislature will be amenable to branch banking legislation in 1977. We are hopeful, however, that the lawmakers will pass modern banking legislation this term — it is an issue of concern to all Illinois residents, and one that is long overdue in this state.

On the federal level, there is some indication that Congress may liberalize the 1927 McFadden Act, which regulates intrastate branching by national banks. The act long has been a roadblock to expansion in urban areas and has hampered bank service to communities that lack financial institutions.

Without new laws, the impact on Illinois banking and on the people it serves will be acute:

- More communities will be without banks;
- Continued branching by savings and loan associations will force banks into an increasingly non-competitive position on retail services;
- More people will travel greater distances and spend more money for simple financial services;
- Industrial growth will diminish as industries find themselves reluctant to relocate (or stay) in communities without banks;
- Some existing jobs will be lost and thousands of new jobs won't be created at all;
- Residents will be denied the convenient, simple, 24-hour service of electronic banking; and,
- For banks, more deposits means more deposits. For customers, more deposits means more loans.

LIVASY:

I believe that the proponents of a change in the structure laws pertaining to branching will again encounter strong and successful opposition at the legislative level in 1977. To date little persuasive evidence has been presented to justify a change. The unit banking system has served our state well. There is no indication that it will not continue to do so.

Union threatens strike against GM

The United Auto Workers said Monday that 380,000 General Motors workers will strike at midnight Nov. 18 if they don't have a new labor agreement that matches contracts already worked out with the giant automaker's two smaller competitors. A noneconomic item not addressed in contract talks at either the Ford Motor Co. or at Chrysler Corp. could prove a stumbling block toward a peaceful settlement. The union claims GM has been interfering with its attempts to organize workers at six new plants in the South. Other key noneconomic items to be settled in the remaining 11 days include supervisory seniority, outside contracting and overtime work while large numbers of employees are laid off.

Unsettled local issues continued to plague Chrysler which settled a contract for 109,000 production workers on Friday, just 10 minutes before a strike deadline, and a separate agreement for 9,000 salaried workers Sunday morning. Some 350 workers remained out in a wildcat strike at the Brownstown Township export-import facility south of Detroit and another 400 driver-mechanics at the Chelsea, Mich., proving ground staged a wildcat walkout. Chrysler has settled 28 of 69 production bargaining unit agreements.

Bakery drivers vote on contract

Some 1,200 Chicago metropolitan area bakery truck drivers will vote in Chicago tonight on a proposed three-year contract with employers. Robert Meidel, secretary-treasurer of Teamster Local 734, said the drivers can strike Wednesday morning if the agreement is not approved at the 300 S. Ashland Blvd. meeting. Companies represented by Chicago Bakery Employers Council in the proposed settlement include ITT Continental Baking Co., Ward Foods, Inc., Interstate Brands Corp., New Process Baking Co. and Campbell-Taggart Co.

Deere to resume production

Deere and Co., the nation's largest farm implement maker, planned Monday to resume production at two plants on the midnight shift following expected ratification of a new contract by striking United Auto Workers employees. A Deere spokesman said production would resume at 12:01 a.m. today at the John Deere foundry in East Moline with 830 workers, and at the John Deere Davenport (Iowa) works with 380 workers, unless the ratification process hit a snag. Some 300 warehouse workers returned to work at a Deere parts distribution center at Milan, Ill., Monday. A total of 27,000 UAW members employed at Deere plants in Illinois and Iowa and at depots in four other states went on strike Oct. 1. A tentative agreement on a new contract was reached Friday.

Blue Cross seeks rate hikes

The Chicago-based Blue Cross and Blue Shield Plan is asking the Illinois Insurance Dept. for 21 to 32 per cent increases in health insurance rates for some 450,000 customers effective Jan. 1. Among the increases sought by the firm, the rate for an unmarried nongroup subscriber under 30 years would increase from $34.56 to $42.16 for two months. The bimonthly rate for family coverage, converted from a group plan to direct-pay program in the 50 to 64 age group would increase to a maximum $318. Comment on the proposed rate increases may be sent to the Illinois Dept. of Insurance, 215 E. Monroe, Springfield, Ill. 62767.

British pound falls 1.20 cents

The British pound and the stock market fell sharply Monday following news the Treasury underestimated Britain's borrowing requirements next year by $3.2 billion. Sterling fell 1.15 cents to $1.6185 before rallying on modest buying to $1.6260. Fears that next Friday will see another huge deficit on Britain's trading with the rest of the world when the October figures are announced also hit the markets. The pound finally closed at $1.6160.

Alaska pipeline 97% complete

With outdoor work on the trans-Alaska oil pipeline drawing to a close for the winter, builders said Monday the 800-mile pipeline is about 97 per cent complete. But construction on pump stations and the terminal at Valdez, the Alaskan port to which fuel will be piped from northern oil fields, is not that far along. But the Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., which is building the line, said work remaining to be finished next year will not delay its scheduled mid-1977 start-up.

Firm elected to institute

Herbert M. Sampson, president and chairman of the board of Northern Petrochemical Co., Des Plaines, announced that the company has been elected a member of the Chemical Industry Institute of Toxicology. The institute is an independent organization supported by companies in the organic industrial chemicals business. Northern Petrochemical vice president Byron Anderson will represent the firm on the institute's board of directors.

CB dealers hurt by FCC ruling for 40 channels

by LEA TONKIN

New federal regulations may have put a dent in Citizens Band (CB) radio sales, but the setback is temporary, says Ted Donhauser, CB sales manager for the Motorola Inc., Automotive Products Division in Schaumburg.

Donhauser said the Federal Communications Commission's (FCC) late July ruling expanding the present 23 CB airwave channels to 40 starting next January surprised the industry. "It came at a time when the industry was at its highest peak of production and inventory," he said. "Consequently, there are some extraordinary values in the market."

Consumers will be able to make deals comparable to year-end closeout sales common in the auto industry, Donhauser said. CB equipment buyers will weigh the estimated 15 to 20 per cent higher prices for 40-channel models and the relatively lower prices for the 23 channel sets.

"UNFORTUNATELY, we didn't count on this happening," Donhauser said of the year-end change. Motorola was not hit as hard as some CB manufacturers by the FCC ruling because the company didn't jump into the market until April and May of this year, however.

Donhauser is among the industry executives who foresee a shakeout in CB market. Manufacturers will have to decide whether they can find a competitive new product in time for the expected January sales boom, he said. In addition to the 40 channel capacity for some equipment, CB manufacturers must meet tighter FCC specifications for transmitters and changes in the receivers' design.

The new "specs" will not mean a noticeable change in CB performance, Donhauser said. The FCC has called for new equipment designed to cause less interference with certain types of radio transmissions.

THE CB BUYER who's confused about the new-versus-old technology should ask a reputable dealer for information, the Motorola executive said. In addition to price, the buyer should consider whether the 40 channel CB unit or a 23 channel set is better suited to his needs, Donhauser said. He said that the 40-channels will best serve CB enthusiasts in heavily populated areas where there is a congestion problem.

Donhauser said Motorola plans to cash in on heavy CB sales, whether the choice is 23 or 40 channel sets. "There's now one CB set for every 20 cars. Even if it's one in every 10 cars, there's still room for growth," Donhauser said.

Motorola's recent entry into the CB market is an extension of the Schaumburg-based corporation's expertise in the communications field, Donhauser said. The company's line of "MO-CAT" CB radios, base stations and related equipment is manufactured at the adjacent Motorola Communications Divisions plant.

ONE IN EVERY 20 vehicles has a Citizens' Band (CB) radio, said Motorola's Ted Donhauser, who adds, "There's still room for growth" in sales.

Economic uncertainties drive Dow down 9.39

NEW YORK (UPI) — Blue chips, suffering from economic uncertainties, fell Monday to their lowest level in nearly a month during the stock market's second consecutive sharp setback in easier trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

The Dow Jones Industrial average, which plunged 17.37 points Friday, lost another 9.39 to 933.68, the lowest since it closed at 932.35 on Oct. 12. The blue-chip average fell 21.86 points last week, most of it after Jimmy Carter defeated President Ford in last Tuesday's election.

Analysts said Carter's election made institutional investors wary because they said they do not know his policies at a time when the economy has slowed down. Carter has said he may favor a stimulative tax cut early next year.

ON A BROADER basis, the NYSE common stock index lost 0.65 to 53.29 and the average price of a common share decreased by 39 cents. Standard & Poor's 500-stock index, which includes some over-the-counter stocks, fell 1.22 to 99.60.

Declines routed advances, 1,119 to 359, among the 1,857 issues crossing the tape.

Volume totaled 16,520,000 shares, down from the 20,780,000 traded Friday.

GOLD MINING issues advanced as bullion prices in London rose to their highest level since March. Market sources said beliefs the Carter administration would attempt to cut unemployment with inflationary programs caused U.S. investors to shift funds into gold. Dome Mines gained 2 1/4 to 44 1/4, Rosario Resources 2 1/8 to 25 5/8, ASA Ltd. gained 1 7/8 to 20 5/8, Homestake Mining 1 1/4 to 37 7/8 and Campbell Red Lake 1-18 to 24-5/8.

Zale Corp. led the Big Board active list, off 1 1/4 to 11 1/4 on 479,300 shares, including a block of 330,000 shares at 11 1/4 and one of 100,000 shares at 12. A former company official last week was acquitted of larceny charges.

Texaco was the second most active issue, off 3/8 to 25-5/8 on 184,800 shares. Continental Telephone followed, unchanged at 15 on 178,700 shares.

Prices closed lower in moderate trading on the American Stock Exchange. The average price of an Amex share decreased eight cents. Volume totaled 1,660,000 shares, compared with 2,170,000 traded Friday.

Senators barred by Israel from A-plant

Israel has barred a group of 13 U.S. senators from visiting its secret atomic facility at Dimona where enough plutonium is stored to build an estimated 20 atomic bombs, delegation sources said Monday. The senators are on a visit to Israel, Egypt and Iran to check safeguards for promised U.S. nuclear reactors. Sen. Howard Baker, R-Tenn., said the United States wants to make sure "adequate safeguards are built into the agreement to prevent diversion of material for non-useful purposes in any country."

Troops battle in Angola

Fighting between Cuban-backed Angolan forces and antigovernment guerrillas raged in Angola near the border with South West Africa (Namibia) Monday in battles that have claimed several hundred civilian lives, the South African radio reported. The South African Broadcasting Corp. correspondent in Oshakati said artillery and small arms fire could be heard from the South West African side of the frontier. Refugees said the Angolan government troops, Cuban soldiers and members of the South West African Peoples Organization were trying to break the hold UNITA guerrillas had on the rural population.

Japan to return MIG25

Japan will return a top secret MIG25 to the Soviet Union Friday despite Moscow's refusal to pay for damages incurred by a defecting Russian pilot who flew the plane to northern airspace, government sources said Monday. Japanese foreign ministry sources said broad agreement on terms of the plane's return had been reached in talks between the Soviet Union and Japan and a final accord was expected to be reached at a meeting between foreign ministry and Soviet embassy officials Tuesday.

Second debate 'decisive'

The second debate, in which President Ford said the Soviet Union does not dominate Eastern Europe, was "the most decisive moment" in the presidential campaign, pollster George Gallup said Monday. He said Jimmy Carter held off Ford's "remarkable comeback" also because of economic conditions and a collapse of support for independent Eugene McCarthy.

Crew's drinking surfaces again

A Mississippi River pilot Monday said if state officials had not ignored evidence two years ago indicating the crew of the George Prince drank while on duty, a fatal collision between the ferryboat and a tanker might have been avoided. A 1974 collision between the George Prince and the tugboat Atcheson produced no fatalities, but the tug's pilot, Leroy Cannon, said an investigation produced evidence the crew was drinking.

Ford, Carter take it nice 'n' easy

From Herald news services. President-elect Jimmy Carter was secluded from reporters and the public Monday on St. Simons Island, Ga., as he rested and worked. In Palm Springs, Calif., meantime, President Ford swam, golfed and sun-bathed in splendid seclusion, leaving the world outside the guarded gates of millionaires' retreats.

Carter's press secretary, Jody Powell, cancelled a news briefing as Carter and his family enjoyed the third day of a "working vacation" at a private picnic on a small island that is part of the 1,300-acre Musgrove plantation off the coast of Georgia.

Powell had not talked to Carter, but said it was his guess the president-elect would conclude his vacation Thursday and return to his home in Plains, Ga.

Ford told reporters "I couldn't feel better," as he left his rented villa, climbed into a tan limousine and sped off for a round of golf at the ultra-private La Quinta Country Club. The President, Mrs. Ford and three of their children flew to this desert resort Sunday.

Carter plans to meet in the near future with Ford, but, with both men vacationing, no time has been set.

3 nations rocked by earthquakes

by United Press International

Earthquakes shook the Philippines, Greece and Japan Monday, adding to the destruction caused by tremors which struck in China and Iran Sunday.

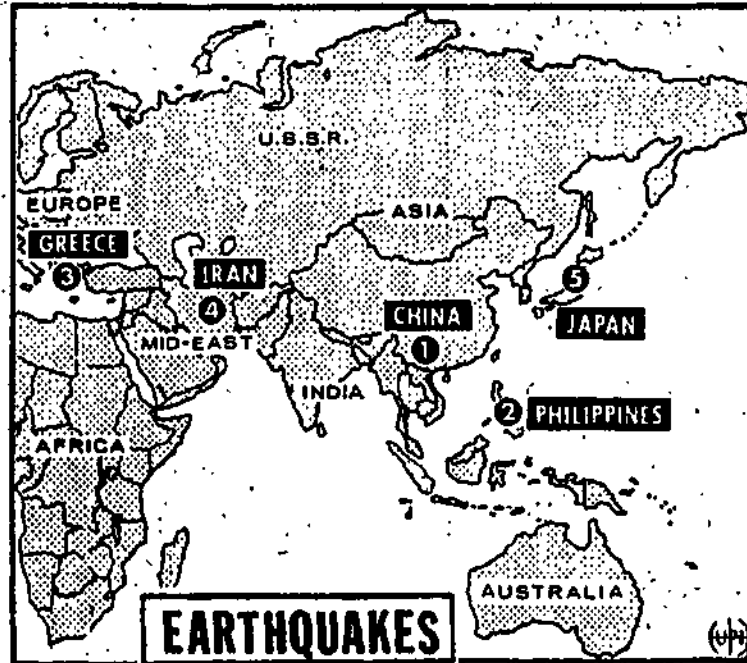

No deaths were reported as a result of the quakes Monday but authorities reported heavy damage to several buildings in the Philippines and approximately 300 persons in shock or injured during a panic caused by the Greek tremors.

There was no damage or casualties reported in Japan.

In northeastern Iran a tremor caused 18 deaths and damaged three villages Sunday while a strong earthquake rocked southwest China. There were no reports on damages or casualties from China.

The Chinese quake struck almost 24 hours before the southern Philippines was hit by a powerful earthquake equal in intensity and in the same general area as the one which killed more than 4,000 persons three months ago.

The quake occurred off the Surigao del Sur, a mountainous province 450 miles southeast of Manila, at 1:11 a.m. It measured 7 on the Rossi-Forrel scale of 9.

EARTHQUAKES STRUCK around the world Sunday and Monday. A strong quake rocked southwest China Sunday with a magnitude of 6.3 on the open-ended Richter scale. Other tremors struck southern Philippines and central and northern Japan Monday. At least 10 tremors struck Salonica, Greece early Monday.

Most of the damage in the previous quake in the Philippines was caused by a tidal wave but authorities said there was little chance of this recurring with Monday's quake. Initial reports reaching Manila said at least five buildings, including three schools and a church, were destroyed in one town. Damage in other towns included an estimated $125,000 damage to a warehouse and $800,000 damage to a plywood plant.

Authorities said they do not expect any major damage in the region hit hardest by the quake because houses there are made of light materials.

In Salonica, Greece, the series of earth tremors drove thousands of persons into the streets in one of the worst panics the port city of 700,000 has known.

"Such a panic never happened before, not even when the city was bombed during the war," a police spokesman said.

The Athens observatory said more than 10 tremors registering 3.5 on the open-ended Richter scale occurred between 9:14 p.m. Sunday and 3 a.m. Monday with an epicenter 100 miles north of Athens, about half way between the capital and Salonica on the Aegean coast.

Meanwhile, the quake in Japan shook the central and northern areas extensively but there were no immediate reports of casualties or damage, the country's meteorological agency reported.

GENOA, Italy (UPI) — A constantly conceiving call-girl was taken to a Genoa jail by police Monday — for failing to be pregnant.

Streetwalker Rita Luciani Gemignani had managed to stay out of prison for four years by getting herself pregnant and delivering four children. Italian Law Number 146 says no woman sentenced to jail can begin serving her term if she is pregnant or has given birth within the previous six months.

Miss Gemignani, sentenced to 14 months imprisonment for failing to leave various Italian cities where she plied her trade, had read the law — and every time police called she waved a doctor's certificate proving her unjailable condition.

DETECTIVES WHO called on her on Monday morning heard the familiar "I'm pregnant" from Miss Gemignani — but this time she had no certificate.

Not letting her out of sight for a second in case her condition changed, police drove her to a clinic. When the pregnancy test proved negative they gave her another free ride — to Genoa's bleak Marassi jail.

Many female felons in Italy have used the "expectant" excuse to postpone doing time. But most eventually get caught, or just decide it is all too exhausting and reach for the handquale she avoided the nine months legal confinement by going in for seven separate nine-month medical confinements.

HER LUCK AND energy ran out in 1959 — when police triumphantly took her to Poggioreale jail in Naples to start her sentence.

The case caused uproar and the then President Giovanni Gronchi pardoned her after only four months.

Producer Carlo Ponti made a film "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow" about the case starring Sophia Loren. Mrs. Prisco sued Ponti for exploiting her life story and got an out-of-court settlement of $2,400 which her husband invested in a garage.

By 1966 Mrs. Prisco, then 45, was sentenced to another 23 days jail for smuggling — but decided to do time instead of asking her husband for help, saying "I'm through with all that — or almost."

Experts share tips on shoplifting curbs

Christmastime is approaching and merchants are preparing for the yuletide rush.

But another group also is geared for peak holiday shopping days. They are the thieves, con artists, shoplifters and forgers who will be out in force this year to take advantage of rushed and harried store clerks.

James Fennelly, security director for Carson Pirie Scott and Co. stores, was one of several experts Monday morning offering 40 Buffalo Grove and Mount Prospect businessmen tips on how to curb thefts by fraud and shoplifting.

Fennelly gave his advice during a special crime prevention seminar at the Randolph Shopping Center, Mount Prospect. The seminar, the first joint program offered by the police departments of Buffalo Grove and Mount Prospect, featured discussion, films and demonstrations of clever techniques and devices used by shoplifters.

One device — booster bag — can be anything from a large purse to a fake "rolled up" sleeping bag which is actually hollow, Fennelly said.

"Customers carrying those big shopping bags or extra large purses may be innocent looking, but it's 99 to 1 that the person carrying it is going to rip you off," he said.

John Doerres, security manager for Bank Americard Co., told the group alert clerks can make the difference between extra large losses and relatively small losses through credit card fraud.

Paris in the spring

A casual and baggy look

PARIS — The main Paris look for spring is long, loose and casually baggy.

There's another look: short and leggy. But it's strictly a sideshow to the main spectacle.

The spring fashion most likely to succeed is a full cotton skirt, full-sleeved blouse, little vest of some sort and loose shirt jacket.

For late day, the wildfire style is the full-skirted, wasp waist dress with lots of top fullness, looking like peasant folklore or garden party outfits.

The silhouette stems from designer Yves Saint Laurent's daring move in his April ready-to-wear show when he swept away his casual, tailored sportswear trouser-skirt-sweater look woman had worn for a half decade and made romantic, full dresses definitely marking the waist.

THE SIDESHOW that's around town — the mini dress — comes from a designer just as influential as Saint Laurent in other ways, Kenzo Takada of the firm Jungle Jap.

Kenzo put into his winter show last April rear-hugging sweater mini dresses and loin cloths to wear with heavy woolen tights. Since the rag trade watches Kenzo as closely as the Soviets eagle eye NATO military exercises, the word whirled quickly around Paris that Kenzo was going to try mini dresses with bare legs for spring.

Most designers except the high fashion kings threw above-knee shorts, skirts or dresses into their collections apparently to be on the safe side. Thus legs, legs, legs flashed on the fashion runways for the first time since the mini was shelved nearly six years ago.

But the 1977 spring mini version so far does not signal any return to above-knee suits and dresses for street wear or even any serious trend for evening.

MOST OF THE ready-to-wear collections included short outfits for yachts and summer resort parties and all that: Saint Laurent's French ruffled can-can dresses, Karl Lagerfeld's paper-thin silk elongated skirts for the firm Chloe, Tan Guldicelli's wispy silk shorts and matching pearly gray silk jersey evening cardigans, Sonia Rykiel's black shorts with see-through black chiffon blouses.

The short look for sportswear meant Claude Montana's pigskin shorts with matching blouson jacket, Jean Calude de Luca's German lederhosen, Emanuel Ungaro's blousy folklore printed cotton tops with brief shorts, Saint Laurent's khaki shorts, Marc Bohan's walking shorts for Christian Dior, etc.

Kenzo's mini sack dress that started it all is what the buyers rapturously call "a great shape." It's a wide mini with enormous raglan armholes that make for a long batwing sleeve. The dress was shown at Kenzo's presentation, hanging to just above the knees. Or it was yanked up and bloused above a belt very low on the hip.

KENZO MADE it in stiff white cotton and other colors for daytime and in pale pastel satins for evening with charming satin ballet slippers to match.

That's the look that the young and skinny will eye in the stores next spring, and it's as different from the old mini as the maxi.

But back to the long, full, roomy look. The accessories most often seen to tie this idea together included long, frizzed and floppy hair, very flat shoes from tennis sneakers to rope-soled espadrilles and long strands of raffia and beads that sometimes are tied in the hair.

Saint Laurent used his barmal corselets to cinch in the waist and Lagerfeld had wrap-around vests.

THE MOST exciting show during the two weeks of collections was that of Saint Laurent, and it was the longest in Paris memory, nearly 300 models viewed in 2 hours 15 minutes.

After plowing through Soviet and Central Asian and Moroccan folklore in his April and July shows, Saint Laurent for the third time pursued his folklore mood, this time knocking off Turkey and Spain with a can-can dress.

The audience was treated to Turkish bloomers, Spanish flamenco costumes and dozens of gypsy dresses.

Saint Laurent is the only high fashion designer who now unveils his creations for his ready-to-wear and then repeats them for his custom-made couture.

Ladies hoof it in Frye Boots

by GENIE CAMPBELL

What's more maddening than a belt that pinches, a mohair sweater that itches or underwear that won't stay in its place? A new pair of Frye Boots, that's what.

Women want to look "in" before they wear "in" their boots. As a result, this fall we're seeing an epidemic of blisters. And thefad continues to spread.

Though Frye is big news fashionwise, its trademark is well established. Men and women who have worn Fries for years look upon this whole fashion craze as pure silliness and the blisters as — you get what you deserve.

FRYE BOOTS are extremely comfortable (if you take the time to break them in slowly), durable and sturdy. All-leather boots, they will, with proper care, last for years. And in snowy, nasty weather they're superb for keeping feet warm and dry.

Before airports had door-to-door service, some 50,000 airline pilots were satisfied customers of Frye. But you can bet function isn't a primary reason the fashion world adopted them.

Nor is their longevity a real factor. The John A. Frye Shoe Co. first opened in Marlboro, Mass., 1903, receiving a Civil War contract to manufacture boots.

And in 113 years the basic style has changed very little. Only the heel has been raised an inch or two and, of course, the price tag has gone up too, many times. But you can't hold that against Frye.

HOPALONG CASSIDY (William Boyd), who rode the western television trail in the early 1950s, was seldom seen without his black leather Fries.

M. H. Jones, 82, remembers well. As a former sales manager for Frye, he used to accompany Boyd on promotional tours for Frye.

Jones retired in 1960 to open a shoe store of his own in Chicago, Todd's Bootery, and take it easy. Nothing doing.

"I'm busier now than I ever have been," said Jones, who can't even keep Frye Boots in stock.

Even Frye never foresaw its current fashion explosion. "Some styles are back ordered four to six months," added Jones.

THE PULL-ON in russet with fancy stitching on the sides is the most popular style for women, though a new color, black cherry, is running a close second.

Frye Boots with blue jeans tucked inside is a winning winter combination and denim manufacturers are returning to peg-legged pants just to accommodate boot wearers.

If you like the look don't let blisters scare you off.

"Ninety-five per cent of people who buy Frye Boots do get over the hurt stage. Then they think they're the most comfortable things they own," said Jones.

If you keep the leather soft and resole them when the heel runs down, it's possible to get 10 years worth wear out of a Frye," he said.

AND THAT information should soften the price, $60 to $75 for women depending upon the style.

"I'm just guessing, of course, but I imagine they started out about $10," said Jones. But then, he can also remember when he worked for $7 a week and overtime for an additional quarter.

DESIGNER SONIA RYKIEL added a new touch to her traditional long sweater tunics and matching slender pants: loops for carrying extra sweater, coat or scarf.

KNEE-SHOWING SKIRTS have been revived in Paris for the first time in six years, but they appear mainly for sport, evening or young wear. This mini dress by designer Jacqueline Jacobson has a knitted wide belt in contrasting color that can be moved up or down for a high or low waistline.

Design your own needlework

by JOANNE SCHREIBER

Tired of paying super prices for prepackaged needlepoint and embroidery kits?

Now you can sketch your own designs, on fabric or on canvas, using new markers which are guaranteed not to bleed or run when the finished work is blocked or washed.

These markers may be used for needlepoint, petit point, gros point, latch hook rugs and crewel embroidery. Use fine point markers for fine work and the broader chisel-tip markers for filling in larger color areas. The sets are widely available, with markers in red, blue, green, yellow, orange, gray, black or brown.

There are many advantages to designing your own needlework. You can save money, of course. But you can create canvases of unusual size and shape. You can recreate the artwork of your favorite kindergartner. You can design something original.

Naturally, it's best to sketch your design on paper first. There is available in art stores an acetate paper which is treated to take markers on its reverse side or you can make your drawing on opaque paper and lay the canvas over it to transfer the design.

The easiest way to trace a drawing is to work on glass with back lighting — either a window or a glass table with light coming from underneath. Tape the drawing and canvas to the glass and use your markers to transfer the design. You will not be able to get the subtle gradations in color that you can get with your wools, but those can be filled in as you work.

NEW MARKERS help you design your own canvases for needlepoint, hooked rugs and crewel embroidery plus scores of other handcraft items. Here amateur designs a monogrammed pillow.

If you must enlarge or reduce a design, take the easy way: go to your local copy center and get a photostat.

If you are really skilled, you can draw your design directly on the canvas. This works well for geometric or block designs, or with monograms.

The fine line Nepe markers also can be used directly on fabric, to create a handpainted design or as a base for embroidery.

A set of markers would make a fine Christmas present for needleworkers on your list — or use them to create unusual gifts.

Kick off shoes often advises surgery prof

Americans should kick off their shoes as often as possible because a person who walks barefoot has healthier feet than the person who wears shoes, a clinical professor of surgery says.

Dr. Paul W. Brand, chief of rehabilitation at the U.S. Public Health Service Hospital in Carville, La., and clinical professor of surgery at Louisiana State University Medical School, reported his findings at the 62nd annual meeting of the American College of Surgeons in Chicago recently.

"Both health and the joy of living would be enhanced if every American spent a part of each day barefoot in his or her own garden or yard and in those diminishing areas of our country that are still unpaved," Strand said.

The major foot problems that plague Americans, corns, bunions, athlete's foot and ingrown toenails — are caused either by poorly designed or poorly fitted shoes, he said.

MANY OTHER problems of shoe wearers are due to the mechanical stress transmitted to the same part of the foot at every step, Brand said. Barefoot persons don't have these problems because with each step they take, uneven pressure from the ground affects a different part of the foot, he said.

Brand said he first became aware of the problems shoes create when he practiced in India and discovered the barefoot Indians to be free of Western foot problems.

"I have studied normal feet a great deal and have learned to appreciate bare feet and to be more aware of the weaknesses of feet in shoes," he said. "There is a sense of aliveness and joy which I experience walking barefoot that I never get in shoes."

The doctor says

by Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

Family history plays role in varicose veins

I need your advice concerning my varicose veins. I went to a surgeon this past week who specializes in varicose veins. I asked his advice on a bump that I had on a vein in my leg. He told me I should be operated on for my veins.

I would like to get someone else's opinion before going ahead and getting the operation. I never had a vein in my leg until I had my first child — now 20 years old.

My doctor who delivered my children always told me not to worry about the varicose veins because they were from pregnancy. Now after the last child (9 years old) my veins are worse.

Dr. Lamb, my baby doctor was one of the best in the field. Now I realize that he should have told me to take better care of my varicose veins or he should have told me to see a specialist in that field. Now I can't seem to have faith in what the doctor says.

I am concerned that this new doctor is only interested in operating because he is a surgeon. Do you think I should get another doctor's opinion or should I go ahead and have my veins operated on? I know my legs would probably look a lot better.

There seems to be an inherited weakness to develop varicose veins. Commonly they first appear during pregnancy. The veins in the legs drain into larger veins in the abdomen. During pregnancy the baby presses against these large veins and prevents the normal flow of blood back to the heart.

The pressure builds up in the veins and causes them to become overdistended. The tiny valves in the leg veins cease to work and you have varicose veins. They usually get worse with each succeeding pregnancy.

The lump you mention is probably what we call a "blow-out." There are connecting veins between those you see on the outside of the leg and these veins deep inside your leg. When the valves in the connecting veins fail a spot sticks out which is an enlarged spot in the vein.

What could your baby doctor have done? Probably nothing would have helped much, short of not getting pregnant. You might have gotten some help from wearing support hose or elastic stockings that increase the pressure outside the leg by helping to prevent the overdistention of the veins.

Some years ago such preventive measures were not taken. They are still not used extensively. However, considering the basic nature of varicose veins — stretched veins — I think they are a good idea for anyone who has a family history of this problem. They may also be useful for any woman during pregnancy or those who must stand still for long periods of time.

I am sending you The Health Letter number 5-8, Varicose Veins, to give you a better understanding of your problem. Others who want this information can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it. Just send your letter to me in care of Paddock Publications, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, N.Y. 10010.

After reading The Health Letter if you still wonder about having an operation get another doctor to examine you. If your legs are not bothering you I presume you can get along without it. But if you are concerned about the appearance or are having swelling or other problems surgery is a good approach. It is not a serious operation.

Area rugs over carpet slide when stepped on

Dear Dorothy: We have a small loop nylon carpet for which we made some small throw rugs from leftover yardage. However, we're having a problem. These rugs slip when placed over the same carpet. I've tried attaching rubber canning jar rings to the bottom, but to no avail. Any suggestions? — Jennie Kutschbach

Sorry, Jennie, none. The only time a throw rug will work is over a low pile light carpet, such as is used in commercial floor coverings. Almost all other carpets laid on carpeting float. Any number of people moving into carpeted apartments have wanted to use valuable orientals as throws and have discovered that the moment they are stepped on, there comes a reactive motion. You're in the same fix. It's a nice idea that doesn't work.

Dear Dorothy: Is there some trick to getting the potatoes around a roast nicely brown? Mine taste fine, but they always come out on the pale side. Even basting them doesn't help. — Winifred Coffey

I suspect the answer is in proper parboiling. I parboil ours for about 15 minutes and put them around the roast about 35 minutes before it's done. The potatoes are turned once or twice and basted each time. They're invariably beautifully brown.

Dear Dorothy: A can on my lovely flecked white laminated plastic counter left a rust ring. I'm afraid to use anything rough and so I've covered the unsightly spot. Hope you have some suggestion as to what might remove this kind of stain. — Marjorie Liberman

Try smoothing on a little chlorine bleach, let it set for a minute or so, then rinse off. If that doesn't do it, the popular rust soap surely will. Just follow the instructions.

(Mrs. Ritz welcomes questions and hints. If a personal reply is required, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Write to Dorothy Ritz in care of Suburban Living, Paddock Publications, Box 230, Arlington Heights, Ill. 60004)

WHEN YOU'RE 94, you deserve a special birthday celebration, one like Bessie Harmer had last Wednesday afternoon when Eli Skinner Chapter of the DAR honored her. Hostess Mrs. James Dodds III and Bessie's daughter, Mrs. Enid Bryant, seated on floor, helped open the gifts. The yarn shown soon will be knitted into afghans and slipper sox for hospitalized veterans.

Age doesn't handicap her charity

by DORIE McCLELLAN

At 94 years of age, Bessie Harmer of Arlington Heights still finds much to do in life.

How could she ever be bored while keeping busy with her favorite organizations in the area?

One of them, Eli Skinner Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, honored her with a birthday party last Wednesday at the home of past Regent Mrs. James Dodds III in Arlington Heights.

There were gifts from board members and other special guests and a silver charm with the DAR insignia from the entire chapter.

A MEMBER OF Eli Skinner chapter since 1954 and its chaplain for the past 11 years, Bessie showed her youthful spirit in reacting to questions about life in the later years.

"Even when I have sleepless nights as older people have, I don't have time to fret over the lack of sleep. It is a time to solve those problems that I didn't have time for during the day. It gives me time to organize my thoughts," she said.

And organized she is. There is always time for a variety of service projects in her schedule. At present she knits lap robes and slipper sox for the patients at Great Lakes Veterans Hospital. There also is a huge box in her bedroom full of clothes and toys to be packed and sent to schools sponsored by the DAR.

BOOKS ARE ALSO her friends. Born in Manistee, Mich., Nov. 6, 1882, to Mr. and Mrs. Louis Wallace, she started a teaching career in 1905 that spanned 59 years and included assignments in Palatine, Mount Prospect, Rolling Meadows and Arlington Heights.

Although no longer in the classroom, she continues her interest in the world through reading.

Bessie and her late husband, Stanley, grew up as neighbors in Minnetonka. They moved to the Northwest suburbs when Stanley worked in the area as an engineer.

Bessie now makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. Enid Bryant, in Arlington Heights.

Engberg-Dorn

A December wedding has been planned by Gail Engberg and Randy Dorn, as announced by Gail's parents, the Harold Engbergs of Bloomington, Minn. Randy is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Dorn of Rolling Meadows.

A graduate of Bemidji State College, Bemidji, Minn., Gail works at Meadows Day Care Center in Rolling Meadows. Her fiancé is a graduate of Forest View High School and Bethel College in St. Paul, Minn. He is employed by Becker Securities in Chicago.

Paige-Ruth

Mr. and Mrs. Bernard L. Paige, Mount Prospect, announce the engagement of their daughter, Barbara, to Jeffrey Ruth, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Ruth of Arlington Heights. Their wedding is planned for the summer of 1978.

Barbara is a 1976 graduate of John Hersey High School. She is employed at Lutheran General Hospital. Her fiancé, a 1975 graduate of St. John's University, is with J. C. Penney, Schaumburg.

Cullotta-Kiedzik

The engagement of Linda F. Cullotta to Cary R. Kiedzik, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Kiedzik of Des Plaines, is announced by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Cullotta, also of Des Plaines. A December wedding is planned.

The young couple are both graduates of Forest View High School. Linda attended Harper College and works for UOP Process Division, Des Plaines, and Cary attends North Central College, Naperville.

Bakkom-Thompson

Two students at Carroll College, Waukesha, Wis., have become engaged, as announced by Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Bakkom of Arlington Heights. Their daughter, Susan, and Scott L. Thompson, son of Mr. and Mrs. D. Dean Thompson of Waukesha, are planning to marry next August. Both will graduate in 1977.

Susan, a 1973 graduate of Arlington High School, has been employed at Northwest Community Hospital in the personnel department. Scott works for Waukesha Park and Recreation.

Ask Andy

Mongoose—nature's quick rat trap

Andy sends the Encyclopedia Britannica's 1976 Yearbook of Science and the Future to Jo Elyn Watson, 8, of Florence, S.C., for her question: COULD YOU PLEASE TELL ME ABOUT THE MONGOOSE?

The mongoose is a member of the family Viverridae, and his close relatives include the catlike civet, the ring-tailed genet and the binturong, or "bear cat." To see a live mongoose, you would need to visit such places as Africa, Madagascar, Southern Asia, Puerto Rico or Hawaii.

Many countries have brought the mongoose into their environs because he devours rats at a prodigious rate, but his liking for poultry, wild birds and other helpful animals has kept him out of the United States. Entry by permit, however, is granted if the mongoose is kept in captivity for exhibition or scientific study.

Visitors of zoos housing a mongoose have a rare treat. Somewhat resembling a weasel, he has a tapering head, pinkish face and a tail almost as long as his body. Usually weighing about 16 pounds, his fur is often shaded with light and dark rings, giving him a salt and pepper appearance. Easily tamed, he delights crowds with clever antics and comical poses.

The mongoose, unlike most of his relatives, is active during the day. Although he captures rodents and other small animals regularly, he is perhaps most famous for killing and eating poisonous snakes.

In this case, his lightning speed is vital, for if the snake succeeds in biting him, the mongoose usually dies.

The habits and appearance of the numerous mongoose species vary. Some dine mostly on insects, while others prefer small animals. Many dig burrows and live in pairs or small groups. Others wander about in large, gypsy-like colonies, occupying abandoned burrows. Some mongoose burrows are even shared with other animals, such as squirrels. One species, the West African water mongoose, lives mainly in swampy areas and around rivers. Although he has no webbing between his toes, he is an excellent swimmer and diver. His menu includes treats from the water as well as the shore, such as frogs, crabs, eggs, birds and snakes.

The tiniest mongoose is the African dwarf mongoose. Only 15 inches long, he too hunts snakes, although most of his diet comprises spiders, insects, snails and lizards.

Depending on the species, a mongoose may have a coat of yellow-orange, grayish-chestnut, speckled-black or ringed black and white fur. The fur may be very short and dense, long and silky or even short and prickly.

Andy sends a Student Globe to Frank Seamster, 12, of Edison, N.J., for his question:

IS THE VIKING GOING TO STAY ON MARS OR COME BACK TO EARTH?

The Viking spacecraft will not return to earth. The two landers will doubtless remain where they are for an indefinite time. The two orbiters will continue to orbit Mars until they slow down and the gravitational pull of Mars draws them down. The orbiters have a design life of 140 days after attaining orbit, while the landers have a design life after landing of 90 days. This is the amount of time the spacecrafts were designed to function accurately as far as the complex experiments are concerned.

The two Viking spacecraft were launched from Florida more than a year ago and both reached Mars successfully. Their curving flight of some 400 million miles through interplanetary space culminated in the touch-down of two Viking landers. The orbiters, as their name implies, have observed Mars from orbit, while the landers have conducted thousands of complex experiments and collected data while resting on the planet's surface.

Inspired defense wins set

South's one-spade overall was about as weak as you will ever see in good competition, but it almost got him a good result. North raised him to three spades and he would have made this contract if he hadn't run into brilliant defense.

West opened the deuce of hearts. East started the good defense by winning with the queen so that he could be sure where the king of hearts was. Then he led back his 10 of diamonds.

South covered with the jack and ducked in dummy after West played his queen. Note that if South took that trick, he would have to lose two hearts, two diamonds and a club.

Now came the crushing defensive play. West led back a low diamond. This gave South his choice of several ways to lose his contract. If he went up with dummy's ace of diamonds, he would run into those same five losers. So he let the diamond ride around to his nine spot.

Then if he tried to get to dummy

Win at bridge

by Oswald and Jim Jacoby with a diamond East would ruff in. If he played out his ace of spades, East would score his king so South led a club. East took his ace, put his partner in with the king of hearts and ruffed a diamond to set South that same one trick.

A Tennessee reader wants to know if you can demand a redeal if you are dealt a hand with no face cards.

The answer is that you can demand one, but your opponents don't have to give it to you. If the cards are dealt properly the deal must stand irrespective of how bad or good someone's hand is.

Pennsylvania Ballet—a 'dancer's dance company'

by LYNN ASINOF

The Pennsylvania Ballet is a dancer's dance company. It doesn't perform the upbeat crowd pleasers that are more gymnastics than artistry. It experiments with new choreography, and its repertoire is full of works by Benjamin Harkavy and George Balanchine.

There is no hard sell, just dancing. And that makes it an interesting company to watch if you love dancing.

But the uninitiated may have come away from this past weekend's performance at the Auditorium Theatre thinking the Pennsylvania Ballet takes itself a bit too seriously.

PART OF THE problem is the company no longer boasts the great talent of Lawrence Rhodes, whose subtle artistry colored past performances. Delicate female principal Alba Calzada is on leave of absence, and several veteran members of the troupe have departed for greener pastures.

Two stars from the American Ballet Theatre, Martine van Hamel and Charles Ward, were imported as box office attractions, and the rest of the company was left to fill in the gaps.

The program Saturday night was uneven, with the first half showing the company's weaknesses to an embarrassing degree. The second half, however, showed why the company has danced to critical acclaim in New York and throughout the country.

"Adagio Hammerklavier," choreographed by Hans van Manen, is the kind of piece the Pennsylvania Ballet does best. It is a slow, floating ballet set to Beethoven's piano music. Sleek dancers flex and melt and swoop with their partners on a stage that is filled with blue chiffon.

IT IS A SUBTLE ballet, modern in flavor but steeped in classical technique and music. It was what many in the audience had come to see, but they had to sit through two mediocre ballets to get to it.

"Eakins' View" apparently is the Pennsylvania's effort to bring the Bicentennial to dance. The piece is based on the life of Philadelphia painter Thomas Eakins, which unfortunately had little dramatic focus.

Dancers did little but walk through their parts. It was narrative ballet at its deadliest.

The program next offered the grand pas de deux from "The Nutcracker," a ballet that demands a technical excellence no one in the company could provide. Michelle Lucci looked scared to death as she attempted turns, poses and footwork that were just too hard for her. Edward Myers proved an adequate partner, but looked limp in his solo sections.

Martine van Hamel and Charles Ward solved the lack of principal dance talent in "Raymonda Variations," which closed the evening's program. Miss van Hamel's performance showed what had been missing in the earlier numbers. She turned on center, posed with phrasing and had lightness in her arm movements.

WARD, RECENTLY promoted to the rank of principal with the ABT, showed some fast, clean footwork in an impressive series of cabrioles.

The rest of the company, when relegated to secondary instead of principal roles, looks strong and is fun to watch.

Hopefully, the Pennsylvania will find some permanent replacement for its lead talent before it returns to town next year.

Stars not gloating though Meathead, Laverne—success all in the family

by VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Which Hollywood household harbors a pair of married television stars whose separate situation comedies roost in the top five in the Nielsen ratings? Answer: Mr. and Mrs. Rob Reiner.

Rob, son of writer-producer-comedian Carl Reiner, plays meathead Mike Stivic in "All in the Family."

Mrs. Reiner — Penny Marshall — stars as Laverne in "Laverne and Shirley."

Rob's father has nothing whatever to do with "All in the Family," Norman Lear's most successful series.

Penny's family, however, is vital to "Laverne and Shirley." Her father, Tony, produces the series. Her brother, Marshall, is creator and executive producer. Her sister, Ronny Hallin, is a production assistant.

MR. AND MRS. Reiner's shows aren't competitive, although his show is on CBS and Penny works for ABC. In the beginning they teased each other about their standings in the ratings.

Now they spend so little time together there's scarcely time to kid around about ratings, or much of anything else.

Success, the couple has discovered, is not a barrel of laughs.

"Rob and I made a date to see each other after the holidays," Penny said without humor. "He complains that I'm spending too much time on the show. He forgets what he was like in his first year with 'All in the Family.'"

"I'm going to New York for Thanksgiving to promote a new record album Cindy (costar Cindy Williams) and I made. Rob can't go because he's busy writing the pilot for a new series."

"I've signed 50 many papers I might be divorced and don't know it. But I think Rob would have told me."

PENNY DOESN'T smile often. Her humor is sardonic. She was dressed in beat-up denim and a yellow T-shirt with green lettering reading, "I know Cindy Williams Personally."

Penny has a special feeling for the role of Laverne De Fazio. Penny and the wacky Laverne have shared some of the same experiences.

"The show is about two girls trying to make a living and rooming together out of economic necessity," she said. "I had 18 different roommates when came to California."

"As soon as an apartment got dirty I'd move to another. I hated to do the cleaning. Even though we play two

Sittin' on top of the world

The crisp fall wind howling around Fenton Cross' ears doesn't seem to affect him anymore as he climbs 125 feet of steel rungs to a crane's waiting cab every morning in Schaumburg. Once inside his snug Fiberglas enclosure, he begins working on what soon will be another eight-story office building in the Northwest suburbs.

Cross operates a Swedish-made structural crane for the Cardon Concrete Contractors of Chicago. He has been running cranes for two years.

His first job was in Franklin Park on a 10-story building for the Chicago Housing Authority. "They needed an operator and I was it. I guess it was on-the-job training for me."

THIS IS THE third building for Cross, and along with the thrill of being at the top come the danger and the responsibilities. "Those men down there depend on this crane to get them whatever they need," he said, pausing to bring the nimble 134-foot boom around with another full bucket of concrete for the workers. Two or three times a day, Cross checks over the entire crane. The electrical system has to be faultless and the brakes, trolley, pulley and cables all have to be free from wear.

"I've never heard of one of these things falling down anywhere but I guess there's always that possibility," he says. "I don't want to do this forever. I'm too young. I'm 27-years-old now, but look at me. My wife says I look like I'm 37."

He laughs and swings the empty concrete bucket back around for another load. "You know, I think I'd really like to be a salesman some day, just go out and sell things, anything."

THE WHINING of the rooster tail assembly rotating on the giant bull gear has stopped momentarily and Cross reflects, "You know, I really like my job. I do like what I'm doing, don't get me wrong. Every once in a while I get a little nervous up here, especially when I'm pouring concrete. One day the wind was blowing 80 miles per hour and the tower swayed about two feet. I came down a little woozy after that job," he admits. "But this job is fine, I don't pay any attention to it anymore, the secret is not to look at the boom and the sky at the same time."

When Cross isn't up in the air he is on his motorcycle, riding on a country road where there are no steel cranes or concrete buckets, or trolleys or holsts.

And the sound he hears — the motor of his bike and the crisp fall wind rushing past him — is music to his ears.

'Twenty-One Hours' movie stirs painful memories

It was Sport's darkest hour. And, one of mankind's. No one who ever lived through it can ever forget it. It was Jim McKay who, with apt irony, noted it was "taking place nine miles and 30 years from Dachau." It was the day freestyle hatred became an Olympic event.

It took place on prime time television in America, but no one then, and no one now, got a clear idea of what was happening or why. It was cloaked then, as it is now, in a conspiracy of silence. It was an embarrassment to all which history tried to sweep under the rug. The international Olympic Committee changes the subject. The Germans shout, "What about unemployment in America?" if you bring it up. Israel closed the book on it as soon as it happened. It was the fortunes of war, it shrugged.

The events of Sept. 5, 1972, on 31 Connolly Strasse in the Olympic Village in Munich scarred the world. Murder is always obscene, but particularly so when it intrudes on an international festival of the young. It is like bombing a playground, or setting fire to a Mardi Gras.

"TWENTY-ONE HOURS at Munich" was a movie made for television which attempted to reopen this reluctant page of history, the story nobody wanted, the incident the world wants to forget. It is the story of a failure and of dead end. It is a drama and of dead end. It is a drama without heroes, a plot without love interests, an unhappy ending.

The main character in the documentary is the Munich chief of police. It is hardly a part for John Wayne. Manfred Schreiber was handed a disaster, not covered in police manuals. In a city full of tourists, in an Olympic Village full of 12,000 athletes, under purposely lax security conditions (the Germans were determined to obliterate their "Achtung!" image), he was asked somehow to disarm an unknown number of armed-to-the-teeth terrorists who were holding 11 bound-and-gagged Israeli athletes hostage in a most-crowded sector of the village.

He was on his own. Israel pointed out it was a German matter, a criminal activity in Bavaria, after all, not the Holy Land. Egypt refused sanctuary for the hostages or the guerrillas. They did not want to interfere in German internal affairs, they icily explained. As for the German government, well, it was, after all, a Munich matter. Or, at least, a Bavarian. A dozen Pilates washed their hands of it. And, as usual, doomed the prisoners in the process. Manfred Schreiber, a cop, was asked to handle a Middle Eastern crisis. Not surprisingly, he couldn't.

THE STORY began for me that black day in 1972 with a 7 a.m. call from Joe Alex Morris, the Bonn bureau chief of The Times. "About that Arab break-in to the Israeli compound . . ." he began. "What break-in?" I screamed. Patiently, he explained. Then, he asked would I need some help? Would I? I was no good at Middle Eastern crises either.

The day was along, frustrating here-and-there ordeal for much of the press. The Village was sealed off to journalists. And there were no press briefings for those inside the Village, because there weren't supposed to be any there.

But, what "Twenty-One Hours at Munich," which aired Sunday on ABC, disclosed is that the police seemed to know as little about the story as anyone else. There was a scene where the hostages are led out to buses after nightfall for their fatal helicopter ride to Furstenfeldbruck Air Station, and the chief of police pales and covers his eyes as he spots the guerrillas, and says, "My God, there are eight of them!" Nineteen hours after the break-in, they still didn't know the composition and strength of the enemy.

The coverup later was clumsy, too, even as 15 charred bodies were being picked up from the holocaust at the airport, the populace was being smoothly told that all had been saved. And went to bed believing it.

"TWENTY-ONE HOURS at Munich" was not a pretty story. You can see why no producers rushed it into production. In the cliché of the times, it tells it like it was.

moral — and political — dilemmas which could not be solved by a free-way chase, or clever disguises and which ends up in a cry of dismay. The good guys didn't win it. Neither did the bad guys. Or the guys in between.

For those of us who were there, it still evoked painful memories. And questions you don't want to ask. Chief Schreiber is played with taut simplicity by William Holden. The 21st hour should haunt the real chief forever.

Was the decision not to let the hostages be airlifted out of Germany a right one? Or, would the world have seen this as Germans abandoning Jews to the cattle cars again? On the other hand, since all were murdered anyway, wouldn't an immediate frontal assault on the compound have been a wiser solution, saved more lives? Perhaps, but that's the way Hitler would have handled it. And, the Germans of the Olympics in 1972 didn't want to do anything the way Hitler would have done it.

It's a police story, one of one man's

'We had our chances'

Bears' Pardee calm over call

by ED SAINSBURY
UPI Sportswriter

A football official "can eat a flag, but he can't eat a whistle," Chicago Bears' Coach Jack Pardee said Monday.

Speaking of the Oakland Raiders' 28-7 loss Sunday to the Bears, Pardee refused to become aroused over the call of referee Chuck Heberling denying the Bears a fourth period touchdown which could have won the game.

The call came when Wally Chambers sacked Oakland quarterback Ken Stabler and he fumbled on the Oakland 30. Roger Stillwell recovered the ball and ran for an apparent touchdown.

BUT HEBERLING nullified the score because he had inadvertently blown his whistle at the point of recovery.

"I don't know why he blew it," Pardee said. "He shouldn't have. An official can eat a flag, but he can't eat a whistle. Most violations can be eaten. On a flag you can have a conference of officials, but a whistle stops play and you can't overrule a whistle."

"I couldn't hear the whistle. It's in the record book now and it hurt. We had a touchdown taken away. Usually an official won't blow a call like that, but he blew the play and he admitted it. It took a lot of fortitude on his part to admit it, but it's not going to change the outcome."

Pardee had a sunny look at the future for the Bears even though the Sunday loss gave the team a 4-5 record for the season. "If we do our job," he said, "we can make the playoffs this year."

"WASHINGTON has three losses and Dallas and St. Louis to play. San Francisco has three losses and has to play Minnesota and Los Angeles. St. Louis has two losses and has to play Los Angeles, Washington, Dallas and Baltimore. This year I think 9-5 will make the playoffs and usually it's 10-4. So we're not discouraged."

Pardee declared the loss of the Stillwell touchdown was not the only crucial factor in the loss.

"This was a game we very easily could have won," he said. "We had our chances to win. We missed on five or six big plays and we had the breaks and didn't take advantage of them. We had a couple of dropped pass interceptions before their bombs for touchdowns, and we had many opportunities to put it away."

"If we'd taken advantage of our chances, the game would not have been close. We should have won by three or four touchdowns. But now we've got the whole season ahead of us. We're not ready to write the season off, because we can make the playoffs."

PARDEE REPORTED quarterback Bob Avellini had a bad bruise on his left knee and expressed his concern that Avellini was hit hard after he threw the ball "four or five times" after "we get a quick call that cost us a touchdown. I don't like to see that. I don't think they protect him the way they should."

Although Bob Thomas missed two field goal tries, of 33 and 31 yards, the latter with 15 seconds to play, which could have won for the Bears, Pardee said he had no intention of seeking a new kicker.

"Bob is hitting the ball well in practice and in games, and kicking to the north end zone of Soldier Field is a hard kick. If his last kick had been a few inches to the left, he'd be a hero."

"Thomas didn't lose the game. He could have won it, but he didn't lose it. It's not one man that wins or loses. The team is in it together. Everything went the way we had planned Sunday, and it wouldn't have been close if we'd taken advantage of our opportunities. We're struggling together."

'At large' mistake in Class 2A

BLOOMINGTON, Ill. (UPI) — Princeville has replaced Savanna as the opponent of host Dunlap in a Class 2A game Wednesday in the Illinois High School Association playoff series, the IHSA announced Monday.

An error in calculating the point totals for "at large" consideration was discovered Monday in a re-examination of the point totals of class 2A conference runners-up eligible for consideration, the IHSA said.

According to the football playoff terms and conditions, the rules under which the competition is conducted and teams are selected, independents are given first consideration for the "At large" berths.

CONFERENCE co-champions, with 80 per cent winning records, which are not selected by their conference as the official representative, are given second consideration for at-large berths.

Conference runners-up who have winning percentages of at least 80 per cent are given third consideration for at-large berths if they remain available following first independents and then co-champions not selected by their conference.

In Class 2A this year independents East Dubuque, 9-0, and Arcola, 8-0, earned first consideration for the three at-large spots on the basis of their records conforming to the 80 per cent criterion needed by potentials for at-large consideration.

There were no co-champions at 80 per cent. Five teams were runners-up at 80 per cent in Class 2A: Princeville at 8-1 in the Blackhawk Conference, behind Dunlap; Byron at 6-1-1 and Winnebago at 6-1-1 as co-runners-up behind Forreston in the Mid-North; Savanna at 8-1 behind Three Rivers, and Carlinville at 8-1 in the South Central, behind Gillespie.

IN THE FOOTBALL playoff terms and conditions, points are awarded to at-large potentials according to the final season record of each opponent on their regular season schedule. The point totals for the five runners-up were: Princeville 134; Savanna 118; Carlinville 102; Winnebago 98, and Byron 82.

The point system is used when more teams meet the same criteria for consideration than there are berths to be filled.

Bowling's best at World Open

Earl Anthony heads a star-studded international field in the sixth annual $100,000 Brunswick World Open bowling tournament this weekend.

Glendale Heights' Brunswick Northern Bowl will host the seven-day tourney, beginning Sunday.

Anthony, presently the tour's leading money winner, needs just $3,000 to match last year's $100,000 season. He's seeking to dethrone defending champ Davis Davis. First prize is $14,000.

Besides the 16 foreign champions in the field will be such top U.S. bowlers as Carmen Salvino, Mark Roth and Jim Stofanich.

Qualification tournaments were held in Europe, Latin America, Japan and Canada. According to the tourney chairman, one country had 20,000 entries which were paired down to determine the qualifier.

Pitt's Panthers take over top

The Pitt Panthers, unbeaten in nine games, moved into the top spot in United Press International's football rankings in the wake of Michigan's 16-14 loss to Purdue last weekend.

The Michigan Wolverines, who occupied the top spot most of the season, fell to fourth place with their 8-1 record.

Pitt received 30 first place votes to lead with 404 points while UCLA (8-0-1) got eight first place votes and 373 points for second place.

Southern Cal (7-1) was in third place with two first place votes and 286 points.

Rounding out the top 10 were: 5. Texas Tech (7-0), 6. Georgia (8-1), 7. Maryland (9-0), 8. Ohio State (7-1-1), 9. Nebraska (7-1-1), 10. Missouri (6-3).

Bo puts clamps on press again

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Subdued Bo Schembechler, smarting from "as big a disappointment as I've had," Monday barred writers from interviews with his University of Michigan football players a week earlier than usual.

Schembechler and his former mentor Woody Hayes, whom the coach of the Wolverines intensely dislikes being compared to, traditionally emulate one another on the eve of the Ohio State-Michigan season-ending struggle by closing practices and shutting off the normal flows of information.

Michigan was blind-sided from the list of unbeaten by Purdue Saturday, 16-14, and Schembechler has reacted by closing a curtain of secrecy around his players.

"We've had too much of that," Schembechler said when asked if players would be available for interviews Monday as usual. "And it hasn't done us any good at all."

"They've been interviewed, written about, praised . . . shoot, you guys even had me believing that we were a good football team," he said. "I don't care what you write this week. I'd prefer it if you didn't write anything at all."

Ali debuts before Houston cops

HOUSTON — Heavyweight boxing champion Muhammad Ali, who is in town to make a movie about his favorite subject, Monday illustrated his acting talent for the local police.

Ali didn't start out to prove anything. He was jogging in sweat clothes near downtown at 6:30 a.m. when officers W. T. Calloway and S. Orlando stopped him in the routine investigation of a shooting in the area.

Discovering who Ali was, the two thought they would give the boys back at the station a thrill. So with Ali's permission, they hauled a staggering, yelling, apparently drunk Ali in.

The officer in charge ordered Ali jailed, and then the fighter quit the bit.

"Aren't I a good actor?" he hollered.

Finally, the star of the in-process movie "The Greatest," shook hands, signed autographs and went back to jogging.

Bengals hold off Rams, 20-12

CINCINNATI — The Cincinnati Bengals, trailing 6-0 after a lifeless first half, suddenly came to life on the rejuvenated passing arm of Ken Anderson and exploded for three touchdowns in the third quarter for a 20-12 comeback win over the Los Angeles Rams in Monday night's nationally-televised NFL game.

Anderson fired touchdown strikes of 13 yards to Bob Trumpy and 17 yards to Boobie Clark to spark the rally. Clark ran nine yards for another touchdown.

Ruling costs OSU 15 cage wins

MISSION, Kan. — The NCAA Monday ordered Oregon State University to forfeit 15 basketball games in which center Lonnie Shelton played during the 1975-76 season, leaving the Beavers with a 3-24 record.

Shelton was declared ineligible for the 1975-76 season after signing a professional contract with the American Basketball Association Spirits of St. Louis. He was permitted to participate on the University's basketball team by virtue of a Federal District Court order in Oregon.

The NCAA appealed the decision and the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals overruled the district court. After the appellate court's ruling the NCAA Council reviewed the case and voted to invoke several of the NCAA's restitution provisions. As well as making Oregon State, which had finished the season with an 18-9 record, forfeit the 15 wins in which Shelton participated it also ordered Oregon State to vacate the records and performances achieved by Shelton, including his 17.8 scoring and 7.7 rebounding averages.

Four Flyers will finish season

TORONTO — Four members of the Philadelphia Flyers were told Monday they will be able to complete the current National Hockey League season before going to trial on various assault charges stemming from last season's NHL playoffs.

County Court Judge Walter Martin directed Don Saleski and Joe Watson to stand trial June 1, Mel Bridgman on June 8 and Bob Kelly on June 15.

Both Saleski and Watson will be tried for assaulting a policeman and possessing a dangerous weapon — their hockey sticks. The assault charge against Saleski was dropped in a preliminary hearing Oct. 20 but reinstated by Judge Martin.

Sox buy three minor leaguers

CHICAGO — The Chicago White Sox have purchased contracts of three players, two pitchers and an outfielder, from their minor league system, the club announced Monday.

The three have been added to the Sox 40-man roster.

From the Iowa Club of the American Association, the Sox took the contract of right-handed pitcher Jim York, with a 1-0 record with the New York Yankees and a 6-1 record with Iowa in 1976. Outfielder Larry Foster, a right-handed hitter, was obtained from Knoxville of the Southern League, where he led with a .311 average and drove in 57 runs last season.

The club acquired Dave Frost, a right-handed pitcher, from Knoxville.

St. Louis, Montreal swap six

ST. LOUIS — St. Louis and Montreal completed a six-player trade Monday which sent Bill Greif, Angel Torres and Sam Mejias to the Expos in return for Steve Dunning, Tony Scott and Pat Scanlon.

Greif, a righthanded relief pitcher, was 1-5 in 47 games for the Cardinals with a 4.09 ERA and six saves. Torres, a left-handed reliever, was 2-5 in 48 games with the club's Arkansas farm team.

Mejias is an outfielder who batted .323 at the Cardinals' Tulsa farm club. He saw a brief stint in St. Louis at the end of the season.

Dunning is a righthanded pitcher who has moved around since signing with Cleveland in 1970, playing for the Texas Rangers, Chicago White Sox and California Angels. He was 3-0 for the Expos' Denver farm team and 2-6 with Montreal after being called up last May.

Scott, a 25-year-old outfielder, played for new Cardinal manager Vern Rapp last season at Denver. He batted .311 and stole 18 bases.

Scanlon, an infielder who also played for Rapp at Denver last season, batted .306 with 18 homers and 78 runs batted in. He also hit .185 in 11 games with the Expos.

Anderson apologizes to Munson

Sparky Anderson

DAYTON, Ohio (UPI) — Cincinnati Reds Manager Sparky Anderson has sent a letter of apology to New York Yankees catcher Thurman Munson for remarks he made following the final game of the World Series.

Anderson, following the last game of the Reds four-game sweep of the Yankees, was asked to compare Bench, voted the Series' most valuable player, with Munson.

"Don't ask me to compare Johnny Bench with any other catcher," Anderson replied to the question. "Don't embarrass anyone."

Munson was standing at the rear of the interview room when Anderson made the remark and later expressed heated displeasure with the remark by Anderson.

Anderson, whose letter was dated Nov. 2, sent a copy to St. Burick, sports editor of the Dayton Daily News, and told Burick: "I feel I owe it to him (Munson)."

The letter read:

"Dear Thurman

First of all, I hope you will accept my sincere apology.

I had no intention of trying to belittle you or any other catcher. What I said about comparing Bench to another catcher, I have said not only this year, but in other years.

Thurman, I might be at fault for speaking so strongly on Bench, but that is the way I feel. I sure hope I will never purposely try to belittle anyone.

I only hope you will know how sincere I am about this letter.

Sincerely, Sparky."

Exploratory surgery for USC player

CULVER CITY, Calif. (UPI) — Michael Carey, second string defensive back for the University of Southern California, Monday underwent exploratory surgery for Hodgkin's Disease, a frequently fatal cancer of the lymph nodes.

Carey, 21, was in surgery for four hours for removal of his spleen, a liver biopsy and bone marrow examination in the final step of an extensive series of tests to isolate the source of the malignancy.

Carey's condition following surgery at Brotman Memorial Hospital was not immediately determined, Dr. Charles Semel, USC team physician, said.

CAREY SAID earlier his symptoms first became evident in August. A biopsy was ordered last month and three weeks ago Dr. Semel told the industrial engineering major of the disease.

Since his illness was first made public, the 6-1, 200-pounder has received hundreds of letters from persons around the country. He was given the game ball after the Oregon State win last month by Coach John Robinson, who called him "The toughest guy in the world."

He was named captain for the Stanford game and for the UCLA game Nov. 20.

CAREY'S PHYSICIANS said he would require four to six weeks of radiation treatment following the surgery. After that he can resume his hobby of mountain climbing and will be able to play football next year.

He will need further periodic tests for about five years. If the disease has not returned in that time, he will be considered cured, his doctors said.

Carey played in the Oregon State game four days after he learned about his illness, against Cal the following week and against Stanford last Saturday.

Carey said earlier when he was told he had Hodgkin's Disease, "It was kind of like a dream. I thought it might go away."

Retirement

A tale of time for 3 pros

by IRA BERKOW

Three sports figures who made an impact on American society announced their retirement this fall. It is rare when an athlete will make an unusual contribution beyond the perimeters of his field. But here we have three, and each went out in rather characteristic fashion.

One is George Blanda, the antiquarian kicker, who departed kicking (he didn't want to be cut from the Oakland Raiders, at age 49, and threw a tantrum of sorts); another is Henry Aaron, who cut out hitting, with a single in his last time at bat. The third is Muhammad Ali, whose leaving-taking, like virtually every other aspect of his career, was a swirl with controversy.

For none of the above is retirement now news. Blanda and Ali had retired before, while Aaron had been suggesting for the last couple years that the season coming up would be his last.

And all followed Dylan Thomas' advice, whether they were aware of it or not: "Do not go gently into that good night. Rage, rage against the dying of the light."

Blanda was pushed out by a young man who was not yet born when Blanda turned pro with the Chicago Bears in 1950. When he found out what non-plans the Raiders had for him, he complained bitterly, kicked a locker, and, with a huff, left.

Aaron broke Babe Ruth's all-time home run record in April of 1974, at age 41. He hung on for two more years. For two reasons: One, the money was substantial. And two, he could still stroke, even if he was no longer a flash on the bases. (One can picture Henry Aaron, grown old and gray, hobbling up to the plate with a bat for a cane and lining one through the box.)

All retired for as many reasons as there are facets of the man. Few felt that Ali would stay retired — even though he reiterated his feelings that, being a man of pacifism, fighting was no kind of life for him, same thing he said three fights ago. Added persuasion for his decision this time came when he found that, in his last bout, Ken Norton could hurt him without his hurting Norton.

IN THIS "retirement" announcement, one sensed that even if it was not true in fact, it was true in spirit. The great Ali could no longer float like a butterfly, sting like a bee. No, what he did do was lumber like a moose, paw, like a bear.

No matter. The curtain must fall for all of us, eventually.

Blanda, more than any athlete in history, demonstrated Picasso's dictum that "Youth has no age." Blanda retired in 1960 from the National Football League, but returned when the American Football League was organized.

How the pulse beat when in the waning, dusky moments of a football game, Blanda was called in to save the day. The camera zoomed in as the elderly, leathery Blanda pulled on his helmet and trotted onto the field to boot — and we knew he would — the winning field goal. He was for anyone beyond 35 our psychic Geritol.

AARON AND ALI meant something beyond age to us. What they dealt with was at the core of our nation — the division over race.

How threatened many seemed by Aaron's breaking of Babe Ruth's home run record. Somehow, Ruth's record stood for some as a symbol of white supremacy. As his pursuit of the 71 homers drew near, one word in Aaron's mail became more and more pervasive, the word "Nigger."

In the spring before he drove No. 715 over the wall, Aaron was assigned a body guard. Aaron discussed in a newspaper story the possibilities of being shot. He was fatalistic.

Aaron possessed a quiet dignity. For much of his career he was little celebrated. Once the nation's spotlight fell on him, however, he took advantage to speak out against the injustices of the black man in America. It was dignified but it was passionate.

ALI WAS A man well ahead of his time, as a fighter and as an individual. He could move like a mid-weight and yet was 6-3 and weighed 220 pounds. He fought all the meanest sluggers of his day — Liston, Frazier, Foreman — and triumphed.

What got the goat of many, however, was his stand on politics and religion and race. After winning the heavyweight title in 1964 from Sonny Liston, Ali announced he was a Black Muslim, reputed then to be a black militant religious sect.

Ali's stand on not stepping forward in the draft, soured others who, apparently, preferred he follow the hypocritical route of many other athletes who joined the military and then accepted showy sinecures.

Ali was unfairly stripped of his title and forced into a three and a half year retirement. His case went before the Supreme Court, which, in a 9-0 decision, upheld Ali's claim to status as a conscientious objector. A few short years later, most of the politicians who opposed Ali's stand, jumped on his philosophical bandwagon.

Meanwhile, Ali was becoming the most widely known athlete in the world. Rather, Ali was becoming the most widely known living person in the world.

Blanda, Aaron and Ali enriched our lives, for they did not simply survive, they prevailed.

Metamora, St. Laurence earn top UPI positions

Unbeaten Metamora and Burbank St. Laurence won the No. 1 ratings in Illinois high school football this week in the final rankings of Class 1A-2A-3A and Class 4A-5A teams by Illinois coaches for United Press International.

But the two teams, both in the playoffs which begin Wednesday, earned their No. 1 ranking in different fashion. Metamora, the defending 3A champion, extended its winning streak to 27 games, the longest in the state, and held the No. 1 rung every week of the season.

St. Laurence did not win the No. 1 berth until the last game of the season and then more or less by default as the season-long No. 1 team, Glenbard West, lost to Downers Grove North to drop to No. 3 while St. Laurence trounced Brother Rice in a meeting of undefeated teams to move up from No. 2.

METAMORA'S Coach John Helmick had no pretensions about extending the current winning streak too far. "All I want is four more," he said, which would give the Redbirds a second straight state crown.

"We're a different type of team from last year," he said. "We were stronger last year, but now we're quicker and do more things. We don't have to rely on the fullback so much. We run wider stuff, the toss and the sweep, and throw more."

One reason Metamora throws more is quarterback Scott Bartel who has a 55 per cent completion record, and wingback Mark Whittington, who has caught 10 touchdown passes. The Redbirds gained strength for the playoffs too when star fullback Jeff Seiburg returned to play in the last game after a six-week layoff due to injury.

HELMICK USED Tom Miller at fullback while Seiburg was out and Paul Seppelt played Miller's halfback position. Heading into the playoffs, he has three tested running backs.

"It's tough to have a long winning streak with the playoffs," Helmick said, "because the competition gets tougher and tougher. Right now I'm just concerned with Mometone, our first opponent, because we never thought we'd play them and didn't scout them. I'm talking to people to try to find out about them."

"But during the season, we've played against about every type of offense and defense, so we ought to be able to adjust for whatever they do." The major changes in the ratings were in the top five in Class 4A-5A, as Belleville West climbed from No. 4 to No. 2, and Willowbrook moved up from No. 5 to No. 4 while Brother Rice slipped to No. 5. The other five positions were unchanged, held by Rockford Boylan, Peoria Manual, Joliet Catholic, Danville and New Trier East.

I want to die: prisoner

Court delays death of convict

POINT OF THE MOUNTAIN, Utah (UPI) — The Utah Supreme Court Monday stayed next week's execution of condemned killer Gary Gilmore after his fired attorneys asked the justices not to become "part of a suicide attempt."

By a 3-2 vote, the court rejected Gilmore's latest plea that he be allowed to die "with grace and dignity" before a firing squad at Utah State Prison Monday.

"Let's do it," Gilmore requested in his second letter from prison. "I have been sentenced to die. I accept that."

BUT CRAIG SNYDER and Mike Esplin, the two lawyers who defended Gilmore and were fired by him when he decided not to appeal the death sentence, arrived at the court a few hours later to seek a judicial review of both the trial and sentencing.

The justices issued the stay a few minutes later. It will delay the execution until after the court considers an appeal.

"Despite the findings of the prison psychiatrist that certain decisions of the defendant were made with a reasoned and ordered mind, the findings by the prison psychiatrist that in his opinion the defendant was expressing suicide tendencies and was in a period of frustration, raises the question of whether in the present situation, the judicial system will be made part of a suicide attempt by the defendant," the lawyers argued.

THEY ALSO contended the constitutional status of Utah's death penalty law had never been tested in light of the most recent U.S. Supreme Court rulings and that in capital punishment cases "every risk of error" should be avoided.

Utah State Prison Warden Sam Smith had gone ahead with preparations for the execution, which would have been the first in the United States since 1967. He was in the process Monday of selecting a five-man firing squad to execute the 35-year-old Oregon parolee.

In his letter, Gilmore also asked that an attorney be appointed to help him fight for his right to die.

"I have been sentenced to die Nov. 15 at 8 a.m.," wrote Gilmore, who has admitted killing a Provo, Utah, motel clerk during a robbery last summer.

"This thing involves nobody but the sentencing court, myself and the firing squad."

"Don't the people of Utah have the courage of their convictions? You sentence a man to die — ME — and when I accept this most extreme punishment with grace and dignity, you, the people of Utah, want to back down and argue with me about it."

"You're silly. Look, I am sane, rational and more intelligent than the average person. I have been sentenced to die. I accept that."

HE TOLD THE justices that any efforts by his former attorneys, by the lawyers representing two other Death Row inmates or by the American Civil Liberties Union "to stall or delay or appeal" his execution "are to be considered null and void."

Dog's owner wins fight—partially

that would make any social climber envious.

But to city officials she's nothing more than a mutt.

Monday the rural Dallas suburb took Sandra Lynn Purdy, Bertha's owner, to court to enforce a recently passed city ordinance which prohibits residents from owning more than two dogs or two cats over 6 months old.

MRS. PURDY owns four dogs, including Bertha's male, her sons' hunting dog and a 14-year-old "half-blind rabbit hound with cataracts that I just love."

"I don't know if we won or lost," Mrs. Purdy said following the hearing before District Judge Charles Long.

"We compromised," she said. "The city apologized for calling my dogs mongrels and for harassing me and dropped the suit. I promised to get rid of one of the dogs. The judge is going to let me keep my dunes and the old family dog but they (the city) are insisting that I get rid of my 13-year-old son's registered bird dog."

"I don't know how I will explain this to Trent. He doesn't know it's coming and he loves that dog."

CITY OFFICIALS say the ordinance was passed to crack down on strays and a proliferation of dogs on residential premises. There was no distinction for showdogs.

"We haven't had too many problems," said Tommy Kerby, a ministrative assistant to the city manager. "This (Mrs. Purdy's case) is the first real case that has gone to court."

Mrs. Purdy once had six dogs, but she gave away two after passage of the ordinance to "cooperate." But she balked at giving up anymore.

"They haven't run me out of town yet. They promised the judge they would not bother me any more but we will have to see if that's true," she said.

BERTHA IS reportedly the only living Great Dane holding a first degree title for protection, obedience, tracking and retrieving. Dog trainers say the giant canines are usually too big and clumsy to place in competition.

Before Monday's hearing, the city said Mrs. Purdy could not exercise her dunes or train them in the front yard. The judge said the city could not restrict that activity.

"I now can, and you let I will," she said.

BIG BERTHA VII is a prize-winning Great Dane whose owner, Sandra Lynn Purdy, went to court to keep her four dogs. In a compromise, Mrs. Purdy gets to keep Big Bertha and two other dogs but must get rid of her son's bird dog.

Service offers home health care

Home Health Care Service of Suburban Chicago Northwest, a new Medicare-approved home health care agency, has opened in Arlington Heights to provide skilled nursing and therapeutic services to area Medicare recipients.

The nonprofit agency, located at 118 Eastman Center, is approved by the Illinois Dept. of Public Health and the U.S. Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare.

It will provide services to Medicare patients at home under direction of the patient's physician. Services include: skilled nursing by registered nurses, physical therapy, speech therapy, occupational therapy, medical social services, nutritional guidance and home health aides. These services must be requested by the attending doctor.

According to Executive Director Bill Rinaki, providing such services at home costs Medicare recipients less than hospitalization.

Communities served by the agency include Arlington Heights, Mount Prospect, Elk Grove Village, Rolling Meadows, Palatine, Hoffman Estates, Schaumburg, Buffalo Grove and Wheeling. More information may be obtained by calling 253-9650.

New plates may be OK, but save old

A Herald Staff Report
Written by Bill Hill

Depending on where you're driving, it may be OK to have your car wearing the new green and white 1977 license plates.

But don't throw the old Bicentennial ones away yet; some guy in blue may order you to put them back on.

Most Northwest suburban police chiefs have decided to make the best of a confusing situation and not issue tickets to Illinois motorists for displaying 1977 license plates early. The Illinois State Police decided last week that it is legal for motorists to change to the new plates, but Sec. of State Michael Howlett insists the deadline for switching is still Dec. 1.

THE ONLY alternatives most local police chiefs see available to them is to look the other way when cars with the green-and-white 1977 plates go by, or stop them and ask drivers to change back to the red, white and blues until Dec. 1.

It is unlikely that citations will be issued.

"When they do things like this, they only create confusion and put the people in the middle," said Des Plaines Police Chief Arthur Hintz, who says his department will adopt an "educational and warning" approach. "With all this confusion, we won't issue tickets," he said.

The one million sets of license plates already mailed by Howlett's office include a notice that they cannot be used before Dec. 1. This has been the procedure for as long as Howlett's spokesmen can remember.

Teen-age mothers receive help

by SHERYL JEDLINSKI

Program to stress 'action learning'

by DIANE GRANAT

Students at Maine East High School next fall may be learning their English lessons in a newspaper office and studying science in a water purification plant.

A new program, the Senior Experience Action Curriculum, will begin in September for about 100 seniors at Maine East, 2801 Dempster St., Park Ridge. The High School Dist. 207 Board of Education has approved the program for a one-year trial period.

The program emphasizes "action learning" in the community as well as traditional learning within the school, said Michael Myers, assistant superintendent for instruction.

STUDENTS ELECTING the program will spend nine weeks studying one academic area for the entire day. The areas of focus will be English, science, social science and career exploration. Special arrangements will be made to fulfill physical education requirements, and students may take one elective during the quarter.

Community and school resources will both be used for each area of study, Myers said. During the quarter devoted to English, for example, students may study writing through a visit to a newspaper office, he said.

Myers said the science curriculum will involve visits to water purification plants, atomic energy plants and other industrial sites. The social science unit will include participation in local and state governmental bodies and visits to federal offices in the area, he said.

During the nine-week period emphasizing career exploration students will study "Working" by Studs Terkel, simulate actions involved in getting a job and explore different occupations, Myers said.

THE USE OF community resources will range from a one-hour visit to a company to a two-week internship with a participating community group, Myers said. Students will receive academic credit, instead of money, for their work, he said.

The SEAC program is intended to provide a program of study for each student. Students will set up a contract with a supervising teacher to plan the activities needed to meet the course's requirements. The program will involve a good deal of independent study, Myers said.

Myers said he expects the alternative program to attract the "middle-type student — some of those who are bored with academic life as it is now."

Maine Twp. extends flu shots

Maine Township's swine flu inoculation program for senior citizens will be extended to Nov. 15 in order to accommodate more of the township's elderly.

John D. Reeves, coordinator of the program, said about 5,500 of the township's 12,000 senior citizens have received inoculations since the program began Oct. 28.

The program was scheduled to end Friday, but Reeves said it has been extended in an attempt to reach 100 per cent of the township's elderly.

In addition to serving persons 60 and older, the township program will accommodate the chronically ill who must have a note from their doctor certifying their illness.

The elderly and chronically ill will receive bivalent vaccine that will protect them against the swine flu and the Victoria flu that was widespread last year.

SENIOR CITIZENS and chronically ill persons still can receive the free inoculations for the swine flu at Holy Family Hospital, Des Plaines, and Lutheran General Hospital, Park Ridge.

Lutheran General will administer inoculations at its Alcoholic Treatment Center, 1700 Luther Dr., from 1 to 4 p.m. through Friday. The hospital also will give shots from 6:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. Wednesday, and from 1 to 4 p.m. and 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. Monday.

Holy Family Hospital will administer the inoculations from 3 to 7 p.m. Monday. Persons should enter through the side door of the hospital and proceed to the waiting room on the ground floor.

The program for the elderly and chronically ill is separate from swine flu clinics for the general public. Those clinics, for persons between 18 and 60 years old, will be from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. Friday and Saturday in the C-wing gymnasium of Maine West High School, 1755 S. Wolf Rd.

Persons attending the clinics are asked to enter the school through the C-wing parking lot off Oakton Street.

Strauss to quit as Democratic Party chief

DALLAS (UPI) — Democratic National Chairman Robert S. Strauss, credited with bringing the party from the defeat of George McGovern in 1972 to Jimmy Carter's victory, said Monday he will leave office Jan. 21.

Strauss, chairman since 1972, called his decision not to seek another term "irrevocable."

"I have done this for four years. I'm tired. I'm ready for someone else to go on."

Strauss said he made the announcement because of constant questions about whether he would continue to serve after Carter takes office.

"IT WAS MY intention before very long to call a meeting of the Democratic National Committee," he said. "The primary purpose of the meeting would be to select a new and different chairman. I had discussed this with Governor Carter and his staff and they agreed."

He said he would not seek a post in the Carter administration. He will return to private life in Dallas, where he is a partner in the law firm of Akln, Gump, Strauss, Hauer and Field.

Strauss announced his decision at a Dallas press conference, saying: "I appeared he had done a job."

"There are many things I can do from the private sector to aid the Carter presidency," Strauss said. "I will

Robert S. Strauss

be helping plan the inauguration Jan. 20."

STRAUSS, 59, said he would help Carter and his aides to fill administration posts.

"The formation of a new administration means the location of several hundred new persons to fill posts."

He said Carter plans "sweeping" changes during his term.

Strauss said he told Carter three days ago he will remain chairman until one day after Carter's inauguration Jan. 20. In early December, he will call a meeting of the national committee to select a new chairman.

He said he would give Carter his recommendation for his successor.

"GOV. CARTER and I agreed that I would remain through the campaign and that after it I would leave," Strauss said.

Strauss said he was not interested in running for governor nor would he seek an office in the Carter administration.

Strauss said 10 days before last Tuesday's election he was worried Carter might not carry Texas. But, he said, Carter's swing through the state during the last days appeared to make the difference in the outcome.

He praised the president-elect as "compassionate, serious and tough-minded." "He also has one tremendous asset outside of a very high IQ. Jimmy Carter just doesn't believe there are any unsolvable problems," Strauss said. "He just believes problems are solvable."

Inventor won't let clock run out—success at 52

by JOHN LAMPINEN

At the stroke of 1 o'clock, the "big dump" begins. A shiny ball bearing drops from the minute-hand of Harley Mayenschein's clock onto the top ramp.

The ramp tips. Metal balls rush out, around the curve. Plunk. A second ramp tips. More balls rush around another curve. One lands on a third ramp. It tilts.

The balls crash into line at the bottom of the machine. An arm reaches down, plucks a ball from the line, and begins its slow circular movement to the top.

MAYENSCHN TOOK a drag on his stogie and remembered how they said he had no imagination.

It wasn't his age that bothered the personnel managers at the large toy factory. The firm wouldn't hire him, he was told, because it needed men with imagination.

"It kind of makes me chuckle when I think about it," Mayenschein said, fingering the clock on his desk with a dirty, inventor's fingernail.

But two years ago, it was no laughing matter.

Mayenschein was 50 then. He had been out of work three months, a victim of the recession. And being classified a senior engineer on the wrong side of 45, he wondered if he would ever be able to find another job.

"I had a hard time landing one, to be truthful," the Schaumburg inventor recalled.

HE FINALLY got an offer from an engineering firm in Downers Grove. There was security in the job.

But four months ago, Mayenschein gave up the security. He decided to quit and take his chances in the business world.

The wooden clock that doesn't look like a clock was the key. It is his invention, the latest in a series, but the first he decided to mass produce.

He opened up "Idle Tyme," a small factory that originated in his garage for the purpose of turning out those $75 ball bearing clocks made more for watching than telling time.

The decision to quit wasn't reached easily, Mayenschein said. He reached it only after discussing the situation with his wife.

"It isn't the first time (you've been without a job)," she told him, "so let's take a flier."

MAYENSCHN PLACED the cigar in an ash tray and leaned back in his chair.

The idea for the clock came to him last January, he said. He was fixing his granddaughter's gumball machine, and as those gumballs rolled around, something clicked in his mind.

Mayenschein used no drawings to turn his idea into substance. Four months of evening and weekend work later, the 300 pieces fit together, and he had his clock.

The clock has no hands. But it does have an arm.

The arm takes precisely a minute to go around. When it does, it drops a ball bearing on the top ramp. That ramp represents minutes and tips when it receives the fifth ball.

The middle ramp represents five-minute intervals. The bottom represents hours. Both tilt under the weight of 12 bearings.

When a ramp fills and tips, the ball bearings rush around a curve to the side, one of them dropping onto the next ramp below.

AT 12:59, ALL of the ramps are filled. When the ball drops making it 1 o'clock, all the ramps clear in what Mayenschein referred to as the "big dump."

The clock is made for clock watchers, not time keepers. If he insists, the owner can tell the time by counting the balls on each ramp. Most seem to prefer watching and listening.

He decided to try to sell the clocks on his own, he said, after he took it to a tavern in Schaumburg. Within minutes, he had about 40 orders from other patrons.

Mayenschein ran his fingers through his hair and shook his head.

"I've had different ideas, and then I didn't do anything about them because of the money, the capital, and about a year or so later the thing winds up on the market," he said.

THE TIME is 2:39 as Harley Mayenschein, 52, of Schaumburg puts the final touches on one of his "Idle Tyme" clocks. The clock, which he invented last winter, tells time by the number of ball bearings on each row. The top represents minutes; the middle, five-minute intervals; and the bottom, hours. A motorized arm brings a ball from the bottom of the clock to the top row once each minute. When a row fills, the ramp tips, sending one ball to the next ramp, the rest to the bottom of the clock.

"Everyone who saw one of the clocks wanted one, so I thought I'd go into business and see what happens."

GOOD THINGS have happened. He started his factory with his son in the family garage in August. A month later, he moved into larger quarters.

Then a month ago, he moved into the 2,000-square-foot facility at 1119 Tower Rd., Schaumburg. He has eight persons working for him.

Clocks have been shipped to Minnesota, Puerto Rico, Florida, Canada, Louisiana and throughout the Northwest suburbs. He has back orders for about 160.

Even before his layoff a couple of years ago, he knew what hard times were. He grew up in Wisconsin during the Great Depression. His father went broke twice, and as a youngster, he had to find things to entertain himself.

When he was about 12, he got an unwanted engine from his uncle's farm, attached it to a bicycle and made himself a motor-bike.

"I'M NOT AFRAID to ask a question," he said. "That's the trouble with half the people. They're too embarrassed to admit they don't know."

Mayenschein took one more drag of his cigar and glanced to the other room.

Rows of finished clocks lined the far wall. They were undergoing a four-day test. The buzz of a saw filtered into Mayenschein's office as his employees continued putting together more clocks.

"I don't know where it'll end," he said. "I just don't know." He could only imagine.

by HOLLY HANSON

While local educators adamantly support the idea of sending students in to the community to gain practical experience as a necessary part of their education, a U.S. Office of Education report recommending a gradual shortening of the school day received mixed reactions.

"Certainly it isn't an 8-to-4 day anymore," said Roderick McLennan, associate superintendent for instructional services for High School Dist. 214. "But I really don't see how we could change the hours and provide the courses that students want to take."

About 1,000 to 2,000 students participate in Dist. 214's community resource program each year, he said, and each of the district's eight buildings has its own community resources person who places students in a practical setting in the community.

"Every course ought to relate to a career," he said, explaining that chemistry students have gone to Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, to work with chemists there while social studies students have worked with children in local elementary schools.

EVEN HIGH SCHOOL students, who might be expected to look favorably on the chance to spend less time sitting in the classroom, seemed unenthusiastic about the shorter day.

"I like it (school) the way it is," said Prospect High School sophomore Art Granzier. "We're allowed to do that (work in the community) now. Next year, or the year after that, there's an electronics work-study course I can take."

Other students questioned the entire program, asking, "What happens to school activities?" "Would you get to choose a program for yourself?" and "How much homework is there?"

In High School Dist. 207 schools, students have the opportunity to visit local political candidates, tour art museums, perform in choral groups and bands and work with private industries in the community, said Michael Myers, assistant superintendent of instruction.

"People in the community want to help," he said. "But their first priority is to themselves, to earn a living. Then, it's to help the company make a profit." Industries will hire and train students, he said, as long as a succession of student workers helps the business.

"Basically, we support having kids learn in the community, but there has to be a balance," he said. Spending only two to four hours in the classroom "sounds kind of low to me," he said.

INFORMAL VOCATIONAL counseling, career-related clubs and work-study programs help students in High School Dist. 214 learn outside the school, said Gerald Chapman, assistant to the superintendent.

"Each school has a vocational counselor who coordinates a student's interests with someone in the community," he said.

The district also gives students the chance to work with cosmetologists, assist in the early education program in a local elementary district and take physical education classes off-campus "to let them see what opportunities are available," he said.

Although Dist. 211 planned to develop a professional careers program with Dist. 214, which would have allowed students to observe and assist community professionals, a state aid cut forced the program to be cancelled, he said.

"Although there ought to be a way to get more kids out into the community, two to four hours in school — especially two hours — seems less than desirable," Chapman said. "I don't know what they (the U.S. Office of Education) are recommending us to do that we're not doing."

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A new report on education says American high schools have become "social aging vats" in which students spend too much time at academic work and not enough learning to cope with the world outside.

It recommends gradual shifts to classroom days of only two to four hours, freeing students to spend more time at such practical pursuits as observing community government and helping to run their own schools.

"Both as an institution and as a social concept, the American high school will remain the keystone of this nation's educational system," says the 142-page report prepared for the U.S. Office of Education. "However, it requires orderly reform."

AS IT IS NOW, the report said, high schools "have become social 'aging vats' that have isolated adolescents and delayed their opportunity to learn adult roles, work habits and skills."

The report was prepared by a panel of academicians, researchers, school superintendents and students. It was described as the first comprehensive study of high school education in a decade.

They recommended eventually reducing the length of the high school academic day to two to four hours, starting with seniors and working down to other grade levels as opportunities become available for outside study of the arts, media and other fields.

"A two-to-four-hour day is a necessary concentration of effort by the musician, football player, dancer, politician or scientist," the report said. "The present all-day high school is a costly intruder on this need for both time and program variety."

THE REPORT said students freed of classroom time could, among other things, become part of "a permanent group of citizen volunteers... whose function should be to observe, investigate and to report publicly on all government operations, not as tat-telites but as concerned citizens."

The report also says the schools should give students the chance to try, and fail, in the art of self-government.

"The schools need to be laboratories for error in learning the roles of citizens," the report said. "This means realistic participation in the operation and management of the school."

"It is the only fail-safe institution available for learning the consequences of neglect, venality and the appeals of power. Studied experiments in such consequences should be part of the schools' curriculum in citizenship," it said.

Plainfield School gets dental service

The Children's Dental Service, a non-profit organization that provides dental care to low-income children, soon will be operating in Plainfield School, 1850 Plainfield Dr., under the terms of a lease approved by the board.

The service, which has been operating at Westminster Presbyterian Church, 800 S. Beau Dr., will pay the district $25 a month for use of a room at Plainfield.

Renovation of the room will begin next week with the service planning to begin operations at Plainfield in December. The lease runs until June 30, 1977.

New policy on comment

Teachers in Dist. 62 can not make "partisan comments" on controversial district issues in front of students, according to a new policy adopted by the board.

The policy states that "instructional personnel shall not engage in partisan comment on controversial or sensitive issues pertaining to board elections, referenda, policies, procedures, performance of board and/or staff members, and similar internal district matters in their classes or in the presence of students."

The policy not only forbids teachers from taking sides on these issues in class, but instructs them to use their discretion on whether to discuss them at all. The policy is not an attempt to gag teachers, board member Ann Schillmoeller said, but rather a way to prevent indoctrination of students on partisan issues.

Dist. 63 reviews finances tonight

The five-year financial outlook for East Maine Dist. 63 will be discussed by the board of education at 7:30 p.m. today at Apollo School, 10100 Dee Rd., Des Plaines.

James E. Bowen, district business manager, has prepared financial projections for each of the next five school years through 1980-81.

The projections regard future enrollment, staff needs, salary costs and other district costs, Bowen said.

The board also will review a proposal to have an independent consulting service evaluate the district's operations, Bowen said.

The board discussed the proposal at its last meeting, but decided to research the proposal before voting on it, Larry Reiss, board president, said.

Other items on the agenda include:

- A representative of the Illinois Dept. of Transportation will discuss a proposal to widen Golf Road from the Tri-State Tollway east to Harlem Avenue.
- The board will discuss holding informal meetings with the district's faculty advisory committee.

New plates may be OK, but save old

A Herald Staff Report
Written by Bill Hill

Depending on where you're driving, it may be OK to have your car wearing the new green and white 1977 license plates.

But don't throw the old Bicentennial ones away yet; some guy in blue may order you to put them back on.

Most Northwest suburban police chiefs have decided to make the best of a confusing situation and not issue tickets to Illinois motorists for displaying 1977 license plates early. The Illinois State Police decided last week that it is legal for motorists to change to the new plates, but Sec. of State Michael Howlett insists the deadline for switching is still Dec. 1.

THE ONLY alternatives most local police chiefs see available to them is to look the other way when cars go by, or stop them and ask drivers to change back to the red, white and blues until Dec. 1.

It is unlikely that citations will be issued.

"When they do things like this, they only create confusion and put the people in the middle," said Des Plaines Police Chief Arthur Hintz, who says his department will adopt an "educational and warning" approach. "With all this confusion, we won't issue tickets," he said.

The one million sets of license plates already mailed by Howlett's office include a notice that they cannot be used before Dec. 1. This has been the procedure for as long as Howlett's spokesmen can remember.

Teen-age mothers receive help

by SHERYL JEDLINSKI

DESPITE THE LONELINESS, the financial problems and the overwhelming sense of responsibility associated with being a single teen-age parent, 19-year-old Barbara says she would not give up her 14-month-old son for the world.

Attorney to prepare law

Village to allow zone variation

The Wheeling Village Board has asked the village attorney to prepare ordinances granting Trustees William Hein's request for a zoning variation to build storage units on McHenry Road.

Trustees voted 4-0, with Hein abstaining, to have an ordinance prepared that would include storage units as a special use under the village's service business district zoning classification. The service business district includes automobile sales, service stations and retail stores.

Hein and his partner, John Cargill, 490 E. Mors Ave., Wheeling, asked the village for the variation to build the storage units on a 4.2 acre lot on McHenry Road north of the K-Mart store at 780 W. Dundee Rd.

THE TRUSTEES also asked that an ordinance be prepared rezoning the 4.2 acres as service business. The parcel is zoned for retail business and service business.

Hein and Cargill are seeking the variation because the village zoning ordinance has no provisions for a consumer-retail storage unit. The storage units will be rented to homeowners and apartment dwellers to store personal property.

The board earlier had refused to take action on the request, saying they were concerned the project would cause severe flooding. Allen Garfield, attorney for Hein and Cargill, Monday told trustees his clients will meet all requirements of the village's flood plain ordinance.

Lawrence Oppenheimer, village director of public works, said his review of preliminary plans indicates the project "is workable." He said building permits would not be issued if the developer could not meet all of the requirements of the village flood plain ordinance.

THE BOARD refused to take action on Hein's and Cargill's request that the requirements for water and sewer hook-ups be waived without a public hearing. Trustee William Rogers said the board could be "criticized if we waived something on a project which benefits a member of this board" without a public hearing.

Village Atty. John Burke said he would check into the legality of waiving the requirements without a public hearing and report to the board at its Nov. 15 meeting.

The project previously received favorable recommendations from the village's plan commission and zoning board of appeals.

Dist. 21 events to focus on reading

"Motivation to Read" is the theme of Wheeling-Buffalo Grove Dist. 21 activities in honor of American Education Week, Nov. 15-19.

A district wide workshop for parents on "What Parents Should Look for in Children's Literature" will be conducted at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the cafeteria of Buffalo Grove High School, 1101 W. Dundee Rd., Buffalo Grove. Bill Halleran, an educational consultant, will teach parents to choose better books and develop techniques to motivate children to read.

Reservations for this workshop may be made by contacting Irving School Principal Dennis Carpenter, at 394-2212.

Schools in Wheeling also will feature the following programs during the week:

• Hawthorne School, 200 Glendale Ave., will host a daily "read-in," a book exchange, book displays, a book bank, a library trip and a living storybook. Older children will read to younger students during the week. Parents are invited to attend reading classes.

• Sandburg School, 3316 N. Schoenbeck Rd., will sponsor special activities for all grades. Parents are asked to view reading classes in the library. Some activities include a choral reading in the third grade, poetry reading in second grade and the production of a comic book about schools for kindergarten and first graders by the intermediate students. The P.T.O. annual book fair is scheduled during the week.

• Tarkington School, 310 Scott St., will have teachers read stories and discuss reading for enjoyment with their classes. The school will observe "personal reading time" twice during the week when students and staff

Strauss to quit as Democratic Party chief

DALLAS (UPI) — Democratic National Chairman Robert S. Strauss, credited with bringing the party from the defeat of George McGovern in 1972 to Jimmy Carter's victory, said Monday he will leave office Jan. 21.

Strauss, chairman since 1972, called his decision not to seek another term "irrevocable."

"I have done this for four years. I'm tired. I'm ready for some one else to go on."

Strauss said he made the announcement because of constant questions about whether he would continue to serve after Carter takes office.

"IT WAS MY intention before very long to call a meeting of the Democratic National Committee," he said. "The primary purpose of the meeting would be to select a new and different chairman. I had discussed this with Governor Carter and his staff and they agreed."

He said he would not seek a post in the Carter administration. He will return to private life in Dallas, where he is a partner in the law firm of Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer and Field.

Strauss announced his decision at a Dallas press conference, saying it "appeared he had done a job."

"There are many things I can do from the private sector to aid the Carter presidency," Strauss said. "I will

Robert S. Strauss

be helping plan the inauguration Jan. 20."

STRAUSS, 59, said he would help Carter and his aides to fill administration posts.

"The formation of a new administration means the location of several hundred new persons to fill posts."

He said Carter plans "sweeping" changes during his term.

Strauss said he told Carter three days ago he will remain chairman until one day after Carter's inauguration Jan. 20. In early December, he will call a meeting of the national committee to select a new chairman.

He said he would give Carter his recommendation for his successor.

"GOV. CARTER and I agreed that I would remain through the campaign and that after it I would leave," Strauss said.

Strauss said he was not interested in running for governor nor would he seek an office in the Carter administration.

Strauss said 10 days before last Tuesday's election he was worried Carter might not carry Texas. But, he said, Carter's swing through the state during the last days appeared to make the difference in the outcome.

He praised the president-elect as "compassionate, serious and tough-minded." "He also has one tremendous asset outside of a very high IQ. Jimmy Carter just doesn't believe there are any unsolvable problems," Strauss said. "He just believes problems are solvable."

Inventor won't let clock run out—success at 52

by JOHN LAMPINEN

At the stroke of 1 o'clock, the "big dump" begins. A shiny ball bearing drops from the minute-hand of Harley Mayenschein's clock onto the top ramp.

The ramp tips. Metal balls rush out, around the curve. Plunk. A second ramp tips. More balls rush around another curve. One lands on a third ramp. It tilts.

The balls crash into line at the bottom of the machine. An arm reaches down, plucks a ball from the line, and begins its slow circular movement to the top.

MAYENSCHNEIN TOOK a drag on his stogie and remembered how they said he had no imagination.

It wasn't his age that bothered the personnel managers at the large toy factory. The firm wouldn't hire him, he was told, because it needed men with imagination.

"It kind of makes me chuckle when I think about it," Mayenschein said, fingering the clock on his desk with a dirty, inventor's fingernail.

But two years ago, it was no laughing matter.

Mayenschein was 50 then. He had been out of work three months, a victim of the recession. And being classified a senior engineer on the wrong side of 45, he wondered if he would ever be able to find another job.

"I had a hard time landing one, to be truthful," the Schaumburg inventor recalled.

HE FINALLY got an offer from an engineering firm in Downers Grove. There was security in the job.

But four months ago, Mayenschein gave up the security. He decided to quit and take his chances in the business world.

The wooden clock that doesn't look like a clock was the key. It is his invention, the latest in a series, but the first he decided to mass produce.

He opened up "Idle Tyme," a small factory that originated in his garage for the purpose of turning out those $75 ball bearing clocks made more for watching than telling time.

The decision to quit wasn't reached easily, Mayenschein said. He reached it only after discussing the situation with his wife.

"It isn't the first time (you've been without a job)," she told him, "so let's take a flyer."

MAYENSCHNEIN PLACED the cigar in an ash tray and leaned back in his chair.

The idea for the clock came to him last January, he said. He was fixing his granddaughter's gumball machine, and as those gumballs rolled around, something clicked in his mind.

Mayenschein used no drawings to turn his idea into substance. Four months of evening and weekend work later, the 300 pieces fit together, and he had his clock.

The clock has no hands. But it does have an arm.

The arm takes precisely a minute to go around. When it does, it drops a ball bearing on the top ramp. That ramp represents minutes and tips when it receives the fifth ball.

The middle ramp represents five-minute intervals. The bottom represents hours. Both tilt under the weight of 12 bearings.

When a ramp fills and tips, the ball bearings rush around a curve to the side, one of them dropping onto the next ramp below.

AT 12:50, ALL of the ramps are filled. When the ball drops making it 1 o'clock, all the ramps clear in what Mayenschein referred to as the "big dump."

The clock is made for clock watchers, not time keepers. If he insists, the owner can tell the time by counting the balls on each ramp. Most seem to prefer watching and listening.

He decided to try to sell the clocks on his own, he said, after he took it to a tavern in Schaumburg. Within minutes, he had about 40 orders from other patrons.

Mayenschein ran his fingers through his hair and shook his head.

"I've had different ideas, and then I didn't do anything about them because of the money, the capital, and about a year or so later the thing winds up on the market," he said.

THE TIME is 2:39 as Harley Mayenschein, 52, of Schaumburg puts the final touches on one of his "Idle Tyme" clocks. The clock, which he invented last winter, tells time by the number of ball bearings on each row. The top represents minutes; the middle, five-minute intervals; and the bottom, hours. A motorized arm brings a ball from the bottom of the clock to the top row once each minute. When a row fills, the ramp tips, sending one ball to the next ramp, the rest to the bottom of the clock.

"Everyone who saw one of the clocks wanted one, so I thought I'd go into business and see what happens."

GOOD THINGS have happened. He started his factory with his son in the family garage in August. A month later, he moved into larger quarters.

Then a month ago, he moved into the 2,000-square-foot facility at 1119 Tower Rd., Schaumburg. He has eight persons working for him.

Clocks have been shipped to Minnesota, Puerto Rico, Florida, Canada, Louisiana and throughout the Northwest suburbs. He has back orders for about 150.

Even before his layoff a couple of years ago, he knew what hard times were. He grew up in Wisconsin during the Great Depression. His father went broke twice, and as a youngster, he had to find things to entertain himself.

When he was about 12, he got an unwanted engine from his uncle's farm, attached it to a bicycle and made himself a motor-bike.

"I'M NOT AFRAID to ask a question," he said. "That's the trouble with half the people. They're too embarrassed to admit they don't know."

Mayenschein took one more drag of his cigar and glanced to the other room.

Rows of finished clocks lined the far wall. They were undergoing a four-day test. The buzz of a saw filtered into Mayenschein's office as his employees continued putting together more clocks.

"I don't know where it'll end," he said. "I just don't know." He could only imagine.

The Bisonettes pom-pom squad, the drill team and the flag corps will perform routines.

Tickets, at $1 for adults and 50 cents for students, may be purchased from band members or at the door the night of the performance.

Educators, students say shorter day not answer

by HOLLY HANSON

While local educators adamantly support the idea of sending students in to the community to gain practical experience as a necessary part of their education, a U.S. Office of Education report recommending a gradual shortening of the school day received mixed reactions.

"Certainly it isn't an 8-to-4 day anymore," said Roderick McLennan, associate superintendent for instructional services for High School Dist. 214. "But I really don't see how we could change the hours and provide the courses that students want to take."

About 1,000 to 2,000 students participate in Dist. 214's community resource program each year, he said, and each of the district's eight buildings has its own community resources person who places students in a practical setting in the community.

"Every course ought to relate to a career," he said, explaining that chemistry students have gone to Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, to work with chemists there while social studies students have worked with children in local elementary schools.

EVEN HIGH SCHOOL students, who might be expected to look favorably on the chance to spend less time sitting in the classroom, seemed unenthusiastic about the shorter day.

Next year, or the year after that, there's an electronics work-study course I can take."

Other students questioned the entire program, asking, "What happens to school activities?" "Would you get to choose a program for yourself?" and "How much homework is there?"

In High School Dist. 207 schools, students have the opportunity to visit local political candidates, tour art museums, perform in choral groups and bands and work with private industries in the community, said Michael Myers, assistant superintendent of instruction.

"People in the community want to help," he said. "But their first priority is to themselves, to earn a living. Then, it's to help the company make a profit." Industries will hire and train students, he said, as long as a succession of student workers helps the business.

"Basically, we support having kids learn in the community, but there has to be a balance," he said. Spending only two to four hours in the classroom "sounds kind of low to me," he said.

INFORMAL VOCATIONAL counseling, career-related clubs and work-study programs help students in High School Dist. 211 learn outside the school, said Gerald Chapman, assistant to the superintendent.

Kilmer School, 656 Golfview Terr., Buffalo Grove, will sponsor a series of reading demonstration classes throughout the week. First and fifth grade demonstrations will be London Junior High School, 1001 W. Dundee Rd., has invited parents to visit the school's reading lab, which was expanded this year.

Stevenson School, 1375 S. Wolf Rd., Wheeling, has asked parents to visit their child's classroom during the reading period from 9:15 to 11 a.m. daily. Intermediate students will participate in an essay contest on the importance of education. The winner will receive a certificate of recognition and an invitation to lunch with the principal at MacDonald's.

New plates may be OK, but save old

A Herald Staff Report
Written by Bill Hill

Depending on where you're driving, it may be OK to have your car wearing the new green and white 1977 license plates.

But don't throw the old Bicentennial ones away yet; some guy in blue may order you to put them back on.

Most Northwest suburban police chiefs have decided to make the best of a confusing situation and not issue tickets to Illinois motorists for displaying 1977 license plates early. The Illinois State Police decided last week that it is legal for motorists to change to the new plates, but Sec. of State Michael Howlett insists the deadline for switching is still Dec. 1.

THE ONLY alternatives most local police chiefs see available to them is to look the other way when cars with the green-and-white 1977 plates go by, or stop them and ask drivers to change back to the red, white and blue until Dec. 1.

It is unlikely that citations will be issued.

"When they do things like this, they only create confusion and put the people in the middle," said Des Plaines Police Chief Arthur Hintz, who says his department will adopt an "educational and warning" approach. "With all this confusion, we won't issue tickets," he said.

The one million sets of license plates already mailed by Howlett's office include a notice that they cannot be used before Dec. 1. This has been the procedure for as long as Howlett's spokesmen can remember.

Teen-age mothers receive help

by SHERYL JEDLINSKI

Barbara's son was born the day after her 18th birthday, and it has been them against the world ever since.

Her husband deserted her when she was five months pregnant — the last time she received any money or heard from him. She got her divorce without ever talking to him about it.

Her son is 14 months old and lives with Barbara and her grandmother in Arlington Heights. Barbara earns $82 a week babysitting and cleaning house in Barrington, and somehow they make it from week to week.

THE HOSPITAL BILLS for having him still are unpaid, but Barbara sends the hospital installments whenever she can. If she needs a new pair of shoes or if she needs glasses, ends just don't meet that month.

Life has been somewhat easier for Barbara's friend, Maria, who also got pregnant at 17, but chose to give her baby up for adoption rather than keep him herself.

Unmarried, she feared her baby would be severely diabetic like his father and she wouldn't be able to afford insulin for him. She envisioned herself working all day, paying a babysitter most of her earnings and then having no time left for either the baby or herself.

A few months after she gave up her baby, Maria met her husband. Now at 19 she has a 4-month-old daughter and lives in a comfortable apartment with a man who was willing to forget her past and start fresh.

ALTHOUGH BARBARA and Maria chose different solutions to the same problem, both believe they did right by themselves and their babies. They say they wouldn't have been as prepared to make the choice without the aid of classes for pregnant teen-agers offered by high school districts 211 and 214.

The classes are a local response to the growing national problem of teen-age pregnancies. In the past 15 years, the number of live babies born to mothers under 16 rose 75 per cent, from 26,000 in 1960 to 46,000 in 1974, according to a report by the National Foundation-March of Dimes.

For teen-age mothers like Barbara who decide to keep their babies, loneliness and finances are constant problems.

Barbara applied for welfare, but was told she didn't qualify. They said she would have to reduce her $2,500 life insurance policy to $1,000 if she wanted to be eligible, but she refused.

"I HAD NO SAVINGS account and the life insurance policy was the only security I had for my son," she says. "As it is, it isn't much security."

She often thinks about going after a better paying job, but worries if she found one she'd have to leave the boy in someone else's care and she doesn't want to do that. Watching her son grow is her life right now and she goes almost nowhere without him.

Social occasions don't come up often, however, and loneliness plagues her even more than finances. She has matured too fast for girls her own age, but at 19, it'll be another two years before she's old enough to join Parents Without Partners or Young Single Parents.

"You become a nowhere person," Barbara says. "Where can you go to meet other single teen-age parents?"

Sometimes Barbara wonders if it wouldn't have been better for both herself and her baby if she had had the courage to give him up for adoption. He'd have two parents rather

DESPITE THE LONELINESS, the financial problems and the overwhelming sense of responsibility associated with being a single teen-age parent, 19-year-old Barbara says she would not give up her 14-month-old son for the world.

Dist. 96 reopens Kildeer School

Kildeer School, Rte. 2, Long Grove will be reopened in early February the Buffalo Grove-Long Grove Dist. 96 Board of Education decided Monday.

The board voted 4 to 2 to open the school in the first week of February for about 270 students. The opening of Kildeer was recommended by Supt. William Hitzeman because of growing enrollment in Dist. 96 and overcrowding at Willow Grove school, which has the primary grades.

Students in the 6-and 7-year-old class and the 7-and 8-year-old class who live in the Strathmore Grove development, The Crossings development, Long Grove and outlying communities will be transferred in February from Willow Grove, 777 Checker Dr., Buffalo Grove, to Kildeer this year. At the same time, all fourth graders in the district will be moved from Twin Grove, 1072 Ivy Hall Ln., Buffalo Grove, to Kildeer.

KILDEER SCHOOL was closed in 1973 for remodeling. The board originally expected to reopen the school by 1975. The depression in the housing market, however, and a subsequent slowdown in enrollment delayed the reopening of Kildeer.

The school, which has been ready for occupancy for about two years, is used for early childhood education classes, a Montessori School and administrative offices for Dist. 96 and the village of Long Grove.

Dist. 96's enrollment in September was 1,315 students, an 8.5 per cent increase over last year's enrollment of 1,211. Hitzeman said the enrollment as of Monday was 1,305 students.

Hitzeman said although enrollment has been declining slightly since the beginning of the school year. There is still a heavy concentration of students in the primary grades at Willow Grove. He said the pupil-teacher ratio is as high as 28 to 30 students per teacher at Willow Grove.

THE PROJECTED COSTS for opening Kildeer this winter were included in this year's budget. Board finance chairman Clark Walser said the cost of opening Kildeer will be about $45,000 more than the cost of operating only two schools.

The opening of Kildeer will require the hiring of three or four new teachers, Hitzeman said.

Board member Howard Falk, who voted against opening Kildeer, asked the administration to consider hiring additional teachers at Willow Grove instead of opening a third school.

Hitzeman said "adding another teacher is not going to relieve the special problem" at Willow Grove.

Reading theme of Dist. 21 program

"Motivation to Read" is the theme of Wheeling-Long Grove Dist. 21's activities in honor of American Education Week, Nov. 15-16.

A districtwide workshop for parents on "What Parents Should Look for in Children's Literature" will be conducted at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the Buffalo Grove High School cafeteria, 1101 W. Dundee Rd., Buffalo Grove. Bill Halleran, an educational consultant, will help parents learn how to choose better books and develop techniques to motivate children to read.

Reservations for this workshop may be made by contacting Irving School Principal Dennis Carpenter, at 394-2212.

SCHOOLS IN Buffalo Grove also will feature the following programs during American Education Week:

• Alcott School, 530 Bernard Dr., invites parents to visit their child's classroom during this week. From 9:30 a.m. to 12 p.m. each day parents may also visit the school's learning center. The student council will sponsor a poster contest based on the "Motivation to Read" theme.

• Irving School, 1250 Radcliffe, invites parents to visit all week. During the week, each child will take home a library book and reading lessons will be emphasized in the classrooms. Beginning this week each class will have a daily half-hour quiet reading period.

• Kilmer School, 655 Golfview Ter., will hold a series of reading demonstration classes to which parents and community members are invited. On Monday at 9 a.m. a first grade demonstration will be held and a fifth grade demonstration will be at 1 p.m. Other demonstrations are second grade, 10:55 a.m., Tuesday; third grade, 9:30 a.m. Wednesday; fourth grade, 10:50 a.m. Thursday and sixth grade, 1 p.m. Friday.

• Cooper Junior High School, 1050 W. Plum Grove Rd., will have the school open for parents to visit classes.

• London Junior High School, 1001 W. Dundee Rd., Wheeling, invites parents to visit the school's reading lab, which was expanded this year.

Strauss to quit as Democratic Party chief

DALLAS (UPI) — Democratic National Chairman Robert S. Strauss, credited with bringing the party from the defeat of George McGovern in 1972 to Jimmy Carter's victory, said Monday he will leave office Jan. 21.

Strauss, chairman since 1972, called his decision not to seek another term "irrevocable."

"I have done this for four years. I'm tired. I'm ready for someone else to go on."

Strauss said he made the announcement because of constant questions about whether he would continue to serve after Carter takes office.

"IT WAS MY intention before very long to call a meeting of the Democratic National Committee," he said. "The primary purpose of the meeting would be to select a new and different chairman. I had discussed this with Governor Carter and his staff and they agreed."

He said he would not seek a post in the Carter administration. He will return to private life in Dallas, where he is a partner in the law firm of Akln, Gump, Strauss, Hauer and Field.

Strauss announced his decision at a Dallas press conference, saying it "appeared he had done a job."

"There are many things I can do from the private sector to aid the Carter presidency," Strauss said. "I will

Robert S. Strauss

be helping plan the inauguration Jan. 20."

STRAUSS, 59, said he would help Carter and his aides to fill administration posts.

"The formation of a new administration means the location of several hundred new persons to fill posts."

He said Carter plans "sweeping" changes during his term.

Strauss said he told Carter three days ago he will remain chairman until one day after Carter's inauguration Jan. 20. In early December, he will call a meeting of the national committee to select a new chairman.

He said he would give Carter his recommendation for his successor.

"GOV. CARTER and I agreed that I would remain through the campaign and that after that I would leave," Strauss said.

Strauss said he was not interested in running for governor nor would he seek an office in the Carter administration.

Strauss said 10 days before last Tuesday's election he was worried Carter might not carry Texas. But, he said, Carter's swing through the state during the last days appeared to make the difference in the outcome.

He praised the president-elect as "compassionate, serious and tough-minded." "He also has one tremendous asset outside of a very high IQ. Jimmy Carter just doesn't believe there are any unsolvable problems," Strauss said. "He just believes problems are solvable."

Inventor won't let clock run out—success at 52

by JOHN LAMPINEN

At the stroke of 1 o'clock, the "big dump" begins. A shiny ball bearing drops from the minute-hand of Harley Mayenschein's clock onto the top ramp.

The ramp tips. Metal balls rush out, around the curve. Plunk. A second ramp tips. More balls rush around another curve. One lands on a third ramp. It tilts.

The balls crash into line at the bottom of the machine. An arm reaches down, plucks a ball from the line, and begins its slow circular movement to the top.

MAYENSCHIEIN TOOK a drag on his stogie and remembered how they said he had no imagination.

It wasn't his age that bothered the personnel managers at the large toy factory. The firm wouldn't hire him, he was told, because it needed men with imagination.

"It kind of makes me chuckle when I think about it," Mayenschein said, fingering the clock on his desk with a dirty, inventor's fingernail.

But two years ago, it was no laughing matter.

Mayenschein was 50 then. He had been out of work three months, a victim of the recession. And, being classified a senior engineer on the wrong side of 45, he wondered if he would ever be able to find another job.

"I had a hard time landing one, to be truthful," the Schaumburg inventor recalled.

HE FINALLY got an offer from an engineering firm in Downers Grove. There was security in the job.

But four months ago, Mayenschein gave up the security. He decided to quit and take his chances in the business world.

The wooden clock that doesn't look like a clock was the key. It is his invention, the latest in a series, but the first he decided to mass produce.

He opened up "Idle Tyme," a small factory that originated in his garage for the purpose of turning out those $75 ball bearing clocks made more for watching than telling time.

The decision to quit wasn't reached easily, Mayenschein said. He reached it only after discussing the situation with his wife.

"It isn't the first time (you've been without a job)," she told him, "so let's take a flier."

MAYENSCHIEIN PLACED the cigar in an ash tray and leaned back in his chair.

The idea for the clock came to him last January, he said. He was fixing his granddaughter's gumball machine, and as those gumballs rolled around, something clicked in his mind.

Mayenschein used no drawings to turn his idea into substance. Four months of evening and weekend work later, the 300 pieces fit together, and he had his clock.

The clock has no hands. But it does have an arm.

The arm takes precisely a minute to go around. When it does, it drops a ball bearing on the top ramp. That ramp represents minutes and tips when it receives the fifth ball.

The middle ramp represents five-minute intervals. The bottom represents hours. Both fill under the weight of 12 bearings.

When a ramp fills and tips, the ball bearings rush around a curve to the side, one of them dropping onto the next ramp below.

AT 12:59, ALL of the ramps are filled. When the ball drops making it 1 o'clock, all the ramps clear in what Mayenschein referred to as the "big dump."

The clock is made for clock watchers, not time keepers. If he insists, the owner can tell the time by counting the balls on each ramp. Most seem to prefer watching and listening.

He decided to try to sell the clocks on his own, he said, after he took it to a tavern in Schaumburg. Within minutes, he had about 40 orders from other patrons.

Mayenschein ran his fingers through his hair and shook his head.

"I've had different ideas, and then I didn't do anything about them because of the money, the capital, and about a year or so later the thing winds up on the market," he said.

THE TIME is 2:39 as Harley Mayenschein, 52, of Schaumburg puts the final touches on one of his "Idle Tyme" clocks. The clock, which he invented last winter, tells time by the number of ball bearings on each row. The top represents minutes; the middle, five-minute intervals; and the bottom, hours. A motorized arm brings a ball from the bottom of the clock to the top row once each minute. When a row fills, the ramp tips, sending one ball to the next ramp, the rest to the bottom of the clock.

"Everyone who saw one of the clocks wanted one, so I thought I'd go into business and see what happens."

GOOD THINGS have happened. He started his factory with his son in the family garage in August. A month later, he moved into larger quarters.

Then a month ago, he moved into the 2,000-square-foot facility at 1119 Tower Rd., Schaumburg. He has eight persons working for him.

Clocks have been shipped to Minnesota, Puerto Rico, Florida, Canada, Louisiana and throughout the Northwest suburbs. He has back orders for about 150.

Even before his layoff a couple of years ago, he knew what hard times were. He grew up in Wisconsin during the Great Depression. His father went broke twice, and as a youngster, he had to find things to entertain himself.

When he was about 12, he got an unwanted engine from his uncle's farm, attached it to a bicycle and made himself a motor-bike.

"I'M NOT AFRAID to ask a question," he said. "That's the trouble with half the people. They're too embarrassed to admit they don't know."

Mayenschein took one more drag of his cigar and glanced to the other room.

Rows of finished clocks lined the far wall. They were undergoing a four-day test. The buzz of a saw filtered into Mayenschein's office as his employees continued putting together more clocks.

"I don't know where it'll end," he said. "I just don't know." He could only imagine.

Students need more practical experience: report

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A new report on education says American high schools have become "social aging vats" in which students spend too much time at academic work and not enough learning to cope with the world outside.

It recommends gradual shifts to classroom days of only two to four hours, freeing students to spend more time at such practical pursuits as observing community government and helping to run their own schools.

"Both as an institution and as a social concept, the American high school will remain the keystone of this nation's educational system," says the 142-page report prepared for the U.S.

Office of Education. "However, it requires orderly reform."

AS IT IS NOW, the report said, high schools "have become social 'aging vats' that have isolated adolescents and delayed their opportunity to learn adult roles, work habits and skills."

The report was prepared by a panel of academicians, researchers, school superintendents and students. It was described as the first comprehensive study of high school education in a decade.

They recommended eventually reducing the length of the high school academic day to two to four hours, starting with seniors and working down to other grade levels as opportunities become available for outside study of the arts, media and other fields.

"A two-to-four-hour day is a necessary concentration of effort by the musician, football player, dancer, politician or scientist," the report said. "The present all-day high school is a costly intruder on this need for both time and program variety."

THE REPORT said students freed of classroom time could, among other things, become part of "a permanent group of citizen volunteers... whose function should be to observe, investigate and to report publicly on all government operations, not as tattletales but as concerned citizens."

The report also says the schools should give students the chance to try, and fail, in the art of self-government.

"The schools need to be laboratories for error in learning the roles of citizens," the report said. "This means realistic participation in the operation and management of the school."

"It is the only fail-safe institution available for learning the consequences of neglect, venality and the appeals of power. Studied experiments in such consequences should be part of the schools' curriculum in citizenship," it said.

High School Dist. 125

A foreign language advisory council consisting of parents, and students, chosen by their classes, has been formed at Stevenson High School. The council will work to define a curriculum responsive to the needs of the students.

The first meeting of the council will be at 7 p.m. Wednesday in the foreign language resource center of the high school, Ill. Rte. 22, Prairie View.

Students elected to serve on the council are Bruce Lerdal, Leslie Wilkenson, Steve Radis, Carl Walser, Harold Henhapel, Jeff Larson, Gloria Hernandez, Joy Yamamoto, Don Brady, Renee Johnson and William Agre.

Parents on the council include: Milton Pfetzer, Richard Lang, Leslie Welch, Carol Lerdal, Sandra Lutz, Larry Kendrick, Connie Roeser, Shannon Marr and Ann Dickson.

High School Dist. 214

The Wheeling High School Wind Symphony will be featured at the district festival of the Illinois Music Educators Assn. Saturday at Oak Park High School as a part of an over-all clinic entitled "Development of the High School Wind Ensemble."

The clinic, which is the first of its kind to be presented in Illinois, will be directed by Jack Williamson, Wheeling High School's ensemble director.

Members of Wheeling High School's Choral League will model Bee Line fashions at a show from 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday in the school's Little Theater, 900 S. Elmhurst Rd., Wheeling.

Entertainment is planned and refreshments will be served. Christmas wrapping paper and ribbon will also be on sale.

There is no admission charge.

Highlights from Buffalo Grove High School's marching bands programs will be presented at 8 p.m. Wednesday. The annual band-drum concert will be performed in the school gymnasium, 1100 W. Dundee Rd., Buffalo Grove.

The Bisonettes pom-pom squad, the drill team and the flag corps will perform routines.

Tickets, at $1 for adults and 50 cents for students, may be purchased from band members or at the door the night of the performance.

Educators, students say shorter day not answer

by HOLLY HANSON

While local educators adamantly support the idea of sending students in to the community to gain practical experience as a necessary part of their education, a U.S. Office of Education report recommending a gradual shortening of the school day received mixed reactions.

"Certainly it isn't an 8-4-4 day anymore," said Roderick McLennan, associate superintendent for instructional services for High School Dist. 214. "But I really don't see how we could change the hours and provide the courses that students want to take."

About 1,000 to 2,000 students participate in Dist. 214's community resource program each year, he said, and each of the district's eight buildings has its own community resources person who places students in a practical setting in the community.

"Every course ought to relate to a career," he said, explaining that chemistry students have gone to Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, to work with chemists there while social studies students have worked with children in local elementary schools.

EVEN HIGH SCHOOL students, who might be expected to look favorably on the chance to spend less time sitting in "the classroom," seemed unenthusiastic about the shorter day.

"I like it (school) the way it is," said Prospect High School sophomore Art Granzel. "We're allowed to do that (work in the community) now. Next year, or the year after that, there's an electronics work-study course I can take."

Other students questioned the entire program, asking, "What happens to school activities?" "Would you get to choose a program for yourself?" and "How much homework is there?"

In High School Dist. 207 schools, students have the opportunity to visit local political candidates, tour art museums, perform in choral groups and bands and work with private industries in the community, said Michael Myers, assistant superintendent of instruction.

"People in the community want to help," he said. "But their first priority is to themselves, to earn a living. Then, it's to help the company make a profit." Industries will hire and train students, he said, as long as a succession of student workers helps the business.

"Basically, we support having kids learn in the community, but there has to be a balance," he said. Spending only two to four hours in the classroom "sounds kind of low to me," he said.

INFORMAL VOCATIONAL counseling, career-related clubs and work-study programs help students in High School Dist. 211 learn outside the school, said Gerald Chapman, assistant to the superintendent.

"Each school has a vocational counselor who coordinates a student's interests with someone in the community," he said.

The district also gives students the chance to work with cosmetologists, assist in the early education program in a local elementary district and take physical education classes off-campus "to let them see what opportunities are available," he said.

Although Dist. 211 planned to develop a professional careers program with Dist. 214, which would have

Jaycees sell tickets to shopping spree

A Thanksgiving shopping spree at the Jewel Food Store in the Ranchmart Shopping Center is being planned by the Buffalo Grove Jaycees.

Tickets for the shopping spree are 50 cents each or three for $1. The tickets can be obtained from any Jaycee or Jaycee-ette or by calling 634-3185 or 634-0794. Tickets also are available at the Bank of Buffalo Grove.

The drawing for the shopping spree prizes will be Nov. 13. The first prize is a five-minute spree, second prize is a three-minute spree, third prize is a one-minute spree, fourth a $25 certificate and fifth a $15 certificate.

Shops, office plans OK'd by planners

Plans for a 15-unit professional office and retail shopping center at the southwest corner of Old Buffalo Grove and Dundee roads have been approved by the Buffalo Grove Plan Commission.

The center, being proposed by Koenig and Strey Investment Properties Inc., Glenview, will consist of two single-story buildings forming an "L." Plans still must be approved by the village board.

New plates may be OK, but save old

A Herald Staff Report
Written by Bill Hill

Depending on where you're driving, it may be OK to have your car wearing the new green and white 1977 license plates.

But don't throw the old Bicentennial ones away yet; some guy in blue may order you to put them back on.

Most Northwest suburban police chiefs have decided to make the best of a confusing situation and not issue tickets to Illinois motorists for displaying 1977 license plates early. The Illinois State Police decided last week that it is legal for motorists to change to the new plates, but Sec. of State Michael Howlett insists the deadline for switching is still Dec. 1.

THE ONLY alternatives most local police chiefs see available to them is to look the other way when cars with the green-and-white 1977 plates go by, or stop them and ask drivers to change back to the red, white and blue until Dec. 1.

It is unlikely that citations will be issued.

"When they do things like this, they only create confusion and put the people in the middle," said Des Plaines Police Chief Arthur Hints, who says his department will adopt an "educational and warning" approach. "With all this confusion, we won't issue tickets," he said.

The one million sets of license plates already mailed by Howlett's office include a notice that they cannot be used before Dec. 1. This has been the procedure for as long as Howlett's spokesmen can remember.

Teen-age mothers receive help

by SHERYL JEDLINSKI

Barbara's son was born the day after her 18th birthday, and it has been them against the world ever since.

Her husband deserted her when she was five months pregnant — the last time she received any money or heard from him. She got her divorce without ever talking to him about it.

Her son is 14 months old and lives with Barbara and her grandmother in Arlington Heights. Barbara earns $82 a week babysitting and cleaning house in Barrington, and somehow they make it from week to week.

THE HOSPITAL BILLS for having him still are unpaid, but Barbara sends the hospital installments whenever she can. If she needs a new pair of shoes or if she needs glasses, ends just don't meet that month.

Life has been somewhat easier for Barbara's friend, Maria, who also got pregnant at 17, but chose to give her baby up for adoption rather than keep him herself.

Unmarried, she feared her baby would be severely diabetic like his father and she wouldn't be able to afford insulin for him. She envisioned herself working all day, paying a babysitter most of her earnings and then having no time left for either the baby or herself.

A few months after she gave up her baby, Maria met her husband. Now at 19 she has a 4-month-old daughter and lives in a comfortable apartment with a man who was willing to forget her past and start fresh.

ALTHOUGH BARBARA and Maria chose different solutions to the same problem, both believe they did right by themselves and their babies. They say they wouldn't have been as prepared to make the choice without the aid of classes for pregnant teen-agers offered by high school districts 211 and 214.

The classes are a local response to the growing national problem of teen-age pregnancies. In the past 15 years, the number of live babies born to mothers under 16 rose 75 per cent, from 26,000 in 1960 to 46,000 in 1974, according to a report by the National Foundation-March of Dimes.

For teen-age mothers like Barbara who decide to keep their babies, loneliness and finances are constant problems.

Barbara applied for welfare, but was told she didn't qualify. They said she would have to reduce her $2,500 life insurance policy to $1,000 if she wanted to be eligible, but she refused.

"I HAD NO SAVINGS account and the life insurance policy was the only security I had for my son," she says. "As it is, it isn't much security."

She often thinks about going after a better paying job, but worries if she found one she'd have to leave the boy in someone else's care and she doesn't want to do that. Watching her son grow is her life right now and she goes almost nowhere without him.

Social occasions don't come up often, however, and loneliness plagues her even more than finances. She has matured too fast for girls her own age, but at 19, it'll be another two years before she's old enough to join Parents Without Partners or Young Single Parents.

"You become a nowhere person," Barbara says. "Where can you go to meet other single teen-age parents?"

Sometimes Barbara wonders if it wouldn't have been better for both herself and her baby if she had had the courage to give him up for adoption. He'd have two parents rather

DESPITE THE LONELINESS, the financial problems and the overwhelming sense of responsibility associated with being a single teen-age parent, 19-year-old Barbara says she would not give up her 14-month-old son for the world.

Refuses to let clock run out

Inventor earns timely success

MAYENSCHIEIN TOOK a drag on his cigarette and remembered how they said he had no imagination.

It wasn't his age that bothered the personnel managers at the large toy factory. The firm wouldn't hire him, he was told, because it needed men with imagination.

"It kind of makes me chuckle when I think about it," Mayenschein said, fingering the clock on his desk with a dirty, inventor's fingernail.

But two years ago, it was no laughing matter.

Mayenschein was 50 then. He had been out of work three months, a victim of the recession. And being classified a senior engineer on the wrong side of 45, he wondered if he would ever be able to find another job.

"I had a hard time landing one, to be truthful," the Schaumburg inventor recalled.

HE FINALLY got an offer from an engineering firm in Downers Grove.

There was security in the job.

Funeral services today for ex-village policeman

Police and squad cars from throughout the Chicago metropolitan area will be in south suburban Alsip today for the funeral of Police Chief Raymond Marnee, a former Elk Grove Village police officer.

Marnee, 38, died Saturday following an apparent heart attack during a retirement dinner for another police chief, Elk Grove Village Police Chief Harry P. Jenkins said.

Jenkins said 300 police departments are expected to send representatives and squad cars to Alsip for the 9 a.m. funeral services.

Marnee began his police career as an Elk Grove Village patrolman in 1961. He had reached the rank of lieutenant when he was named Alsip police chief in 1973. His brother Russell is a patrolman in Elk Grove Village.

Strauss to quit as Democratic Party chief

DALLAS (UPI) — Democratic National Chairman Robert S. Strauss, credited with bringing the party from the defeat of George McGovern in 1972 to Jimmy Carter's victory, said Monday he will leave office Jan. 21.

Strauss, chairman since 1972, called his decision not to seek another term "irrevocable."

"I have done this for four years. I'm tired. I'm ready for someone else to go on."

Strauss said he made the announcement because of constant questions about whether he would continue to serve after Carter takes office.

"IT WAS MY intention before very long to call a meeting of the Democratic National Committee," he said. "The primary purpose of the meeting would be to select a new and different chairman. I had discussed this with Governor Carter and his staff and they agreed."

He said he would not seek a post in the Carter administration. He will return to private life in Dallas, where he is a partner in the law firm of Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer and Field.

Strauss announced his decision at a Dallas press conference, saying it "appeared he had done a job."

"There are many things I can do from the private sector to aid the Carter presidency," Strauss said. "I will

Robert S. Strauss

be helping plan the inauguration Jan. 20."

STRAUSS, 59, said he would help Carter and his aides to fill administration posts.

"The formation of a new administration means the location of several hundred new persons to fill posts."

He said Carter plans "sweeping" changes during his term.

Strauss said he told Carter three days ago he will remain chairman until one day after Carter's inauguration Jan. 20. In early December, he will call a meeting of the national committee to select a new chairman.

He said he would give Carter his recommendation for his successor.

"GOV. CARTER and I agreed that I would remain through the campaign and that after it I would leave," Strauss said.

Strauss said he was not interested in running for governor nor would he seek an office in the Carter administration.

Strauss said 10 days before last Tuesday's election he was worried Carter might not carry Texas. But, he said, Carter's swing through the state during the last days appeared to make the difference in the outcome.

He praised the president-elect as "compassionate, serious and tough-minded." "He also has one tremendous asset outside of a very high IQ. Jimmy Carter just doesn't believe there are any unsolvable problems," Strauss said. "He just believes problems are solvable."

watching than telling time. The decision to quit wasn't reached easily, Mayenschein said. He reached it only after discussing the situation with his wife.

"It isn't the first time (you've been without a job)," she told him, "so let's take a flier."

MAYENSCHIEIN PLACED the cigar in an ash tray and leaned back in his chair.

The idea for the clock came to him last January, he said. He was fixing his granddaughter's gumball machine, and as those gumballs rolled around, something clicked in his mind.

Mayenschein used no drawings to turn his idea into substance. Four months of evening and weekend work later, the 300 pieces fit together, and he had his clock.

The clock has no hands. But it does have an arm.

The arm takes precisely a minute to go around. When it does, it drops a ball bearing on the top ramp. That ramp represents minutes and tips when it receives the fifth ball.

The middle ramp represents five-minute intervals. The bottom represents hours. Both tilt under the weight of 12 bearings.

When a ramp fills and tips, the ball bearings rush around a curve to the side, one of them dropping onto the next ramp below.

AT 12:59, ALL of the ramps are filled. When the ball drops making it 1 o'clock, all the ramps clear in what Mayenschein referred to as the "big dump."

The clock is made for clock watchers, not time keepers. If he insists, the owner can tell the time by counting the balls on each ramp. Most seem to prefer watching and listening. He decided to try to sell the clocks on his own, he said, after he took it to a tavern in Schaumburg. Within minutes, he had about 40 orders from other patrons.

Mayenschein ran his fingers through his hair and shook his head.

"I've had different ideas, and then I didn't do anything about them because of the money, the capital, and about a year or so later the thing winds up on the market," he said.

"Everyone who saw one of the clocks wanted one, so I thought I'd go into business and see what happens."

GOOD THINGS have happened. He started his factory with his son in the family garage in August. A month later, he moved into larger quarters.

Then a month ago, he moved into the 2,000-square-foot facility at 1119 Tower Rd., Schaumburg. He has eight persons working for him.

Clocks have been shipped to Minnesota, Puerto Rico, Florida, Canada, Louisiana and throughout the Northwest suburbs. He has back orders for about 160.

Even before his layoff a couple of years ago, he knew what hard times were. He grew up in Wisconsin during the Great Depression. His father went broke twice, and as a youngster, he had to find things to entertain himself.

When he was about 12, he got an unwanted engine from his uncle's farm, attached it to a bicycle and made himself a motorbike.

"I'M NOT AFRAID to ask a question," he said. "That's the trouble with half the people. They're too embarrassed to admit they don't know."

Mayenschein took one more drag of his cigar and glanced to the other room.

THE TIME is 2:39 as Harley Mayenschein, 52, of Schaumburg puts the final touches on one of his "Idle Tyme" clocks. The clock, which he invented last winter, tells time by the number of ball bearings on each row. The top represents minutes; the middle, five-minute intervals; and the bottom, hours. A motorized arm brings a ball from the bottom of the clock to the top row once each minute. When a row fills, the ramp tips, sending one ball to the next ramp, the rest to the bottom of the clock.

Students need more practical experience: report

by HOLLY HANSON

While local educators adamantly support the idea of sending students into the community to gain practical experience as a necessary part of their education, a U.S. Office of Education report recommending a gradual shortening of the school day received mixed reactions.

"Certainly it isn't an 8-to-4 day anymore," said Roderick McLennan, associate superintendent for instructional services for High School Dist. 214. "But I really don't see how we could change the hours and provide the courses that students want to take."

About 1,000 to 2,000 students participate in Dist. 214's community resource program each year, he said, and each of the district's eight buildings has its own community resources person who places students in a practical setting in the community.

"Every course ought to relate to a career," he said, explaining that chemistry students have gone to Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, to work with chemists there while social studies students have worked with children in local elementary schools.

EVEN HIGH SCHOOL students, who might be expected to look favorably on the chance to spend less time sitting in the classroom, seemed unenthusiastic about the shorter day.

"I like it (school) the way it is," said Prospect High School sophomore Art Granzler. "We're allowed to do that (work in the community) now. Next year, or the year after that, there's an electronics work-study course I can take."

Other students questioned the entire program, asking, "What happens to school activities?" "Would you get to choose a program for yourself?" and "How much homework is there?"

In High School Dist. 207 schools, students have the opportunity to visit local political candidates, tour art museums, perform in choral groups and bands and work with private industries in the community, said Michael Myers, assistant superintendent of instruction.

"People in the community want to help," he said. "But their first priority is to themselves, to earn a living. Then, it's to help the company make a profit." Industries will hire and train students, he said, as long as a succession of student workers helps the business.

"Basically, we support having kids learn in the community, but there has to be a balance," he said. Spending only two to four hours in the classroom "sounds kind of low to me," he said.

INFORMAL VOCATIONAL counseling, career-related clubs and work-study programs help students in High School Dist. 211 learn outside the school, said Gerald Chapman, assistant to the superintendent.

"Each school has a vocational counselor who coordinates a student's interests with someone in the community," he said.

The district also gives students the chance to work with cosmetologists, assist in the early education program in a local elementary district and take physical education classes off-campus "to let them see what opportunities are available," he said.

Although Dist. 211 planned to develop a professional careers program with Dist. 214, which would have allowed students to observe and assist community professionals, a state aid cut forced the program to be cancelled, he said.

"Although there ought to be a way to get more kids out into the community, two to four hours in school — especially two hours — seems less than desirable," Chapman said. "I don't know what they (the U.S. Office of Education) are recommending us to do that we're not doing."

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A new report on education says American high schools have become "social aging vats" in which students spend too much time at academic work and not enough learning to cope with the world outside.

It recommends gradual shifts to classroom days of only two to four hours, freeing students to spend more time at such practical pursuits as observing community government and helping to run their own schools.

"Both as an institution and as a social concept, the American high school will remain the keystone of this nation's educational system," says the 142-page report prepared for the U.S. Office of Education. "However, it requires orderly reform."

AS IT IS NOW, the report said, high schools "have become social 'aging vats' that have isolated adolescents and delayed their opportunity to learn adult roles, work habits and skills."

The report was prepared by a panel of academicians, researchers, school superintendents and students. It was described as the first comprehensive study of high school education in a decade.

They recommended eventually reducing the length of the high school academic day to two to four hours, starting with seniors and working down to other grade levels as opportunities become available for outside study of the arts, media and other fields.

"A two-to-four-hour day is a necessary concentration of effort by the musician, football player, dancer, politician or scientist," the report said. "The present all-day high school is a costly intruder on this need for both time and program variety."

THE REPORT said students freed of classroom time could, among other things, become part of "a permanent group of citizen volunteers... whose function should be to observe, investigate and to report publicly on all government operations, not as tattletales but as concerned citizens."

The report also says the schools should give students the chance to try, and fail, in the art of self-government.

"The schools need to be laboratories for error in learning the roles of citizens," the report said. "This means realistic participation in the operation and management of the school."

"It is the only fail-safe institution available for learning the consequences of neglect, venality and the appeals of power. Studied experiments in such consequences should be part of the schools' curriculum in citizenship," it said.

Athletic field plan appears shaky

A request to install several athletic fields near the Egan Water Treatment Plant appears to be on shaky ground.

The Metropolitan Sanitary District has deferred action on the Hoffman Estates Athletic Assn. request until two nearby villages approve the project.

Both Elk Grove Village and Schaumburg have withheld approval until receiving more information. However, an MSD official said that is up to the villages to research the matter.

"WE'RE NOT GOING to do anything until such time as the villages say it's OK," said Edward Lea, assistant real estate administrator for the MSD. "We don't want to get caught in battles with the villages."

In Schaumburg's response to the proposal, last week, the village said it objects to the plan "until such time as some sort of public hearing is held."

Lea said that if a public hearing is to be held, Schaumburg, not the MSD, would host it.

Schaumburg Village Mgr. John E. Coste said the village has no plans for a public hearing.

WILLIAM BRILLIANT, president of the athletic association, was unavailable for comment.

The association is requesting permission from the MSD to use the 10-acres near the treatment plant, Meacham and Schaumburg roads, for baseball, softball, football, soccer and track.

"We were and always have been willing to grant the permit," Lea said, noting that the MSD has granted permission for Little League baseball at other locations. However, he said no permission will be granted without the approval of the two neighboring villages.

Correction

The Herald incorrectly reported Monday that Elk Grove Village fought and defeated an attempt by Joseph Arvidson to win apartment zoning from Cook County for a 30-acre site at Devon Avenue west of Berkshire Lane.

The village successfully fought attempts at apartment zoning for unincorporated property adjacent to Arvidson's.

Teen-age mothers receive help

by SHERYL JEDLINSKI

Barbara's son was born the day after her 18th birthday, and it has been them against the world ever since.

Her husband deserted her when she was five months pregnant — the last time she received any money or heard from him. She got her divorce without ever talking to him about it.

Her son is 14 months old and lives with Barbara and her grandmother in Arlington Heights. Barbara earns $82 a week babysitting and cleaning house in Barrington, and somehow they make it from week to week.

THE HOSPITAL BILLS for having him still are unpaid, but Barbara sends the hospital installments whenever she can. If she needs a new pair of shoes or if she needs glasses, ends just don't meet that month.

Life has been somewhat easier for Barbara's friend, Maria, who also got pregnant at 17, but chose to give her baby up for adoption rather than keep him herself.

Unmarried, she feared her baby would be severely diabetic like his father and she wouldn't be able to afford insulin for him. She envisioned herself working all day, paying a babysitter most of her earnings and then having no time left for either the baby or herself.

A few months after she gave up her baby, Maria met her husband. Now at 19 she has a 4-month-old daughter and lives in a comfortable apartment with a man who was willing to forget her past and start fresh.

ALTHOUGH BARBARA and Maria chose different solutions to the same problem, both believe they did right by themselves and their babies. They say they wouldn't have been as prepared to make the choice without the aid of classes for pregnant teen-agers offered by high school districts 211 and 214.

New plates may be OK, but save old

A Herald Staff Report
Written by BILL HINN

Depending on where you're driving, it may be OK to have your car wearing the new green and white 1977 license plates.

But don't throw the old Bicentennial ones away yet; some guy in blue may order you to put them back on.

Most Northwest suburban police chiefs have decided to make the best of a confusing situation and not issue tickets to Illinois motorists for displaying 1977 license plates early. The Illinois State Police decided last week that it is legal for motorists to change to the new plates, but Sec. of State Michael Howlett insists the deadline for switching is still Dec. 1.

THE ONLY alternatives most local police chiefs see available to them is to look the other way when cars with the green-and-white 1977 plates go by, or stop them and ask drivers to change back to the red, white and blues until Dec. 1.

It is unlikely that citations will be issued.

"When they do things like this, they only create confusion and put the people in the middle," said Des Plaines Police Chief Arthur Hintz, who says his department will adopt an "educational and warning" approach. "With all this confusion, we won't issue tickets," he said.

The one million sets of license plates already mailed by Howlett's office include a notice that they cannot be used before Dec. 1. This has been the procedure for as long as Howlett's spokesmen can remember.

Strauss to quit as Democratic Party chief

DALLAS (UPI) — Democratic National Chairman Robert S. Strauss, credited with bringing the party from the defeat of George McGovern in 1972 to Jimmy Carter's victory, said Monday he will leave office Jan. 21.

Strauss, chairman since 1972, called his decision not to seek another term "irrevocable."

"I have done this for four years. I'm tired. I'm ready for someone else to go on."

Strauss said he made the announcement because of constant questions about whether he would continue to serve after Carter takes office.

"IT WAS MY intention before very long to call a meeting of the Democratic National Committee," he said. "The primary purpose of the meeting would be to select a new and different chairman. I had discussed this with Governor Carter and his staff and they agreed."

He said he would not seek a post in the Carter administration. He will return to private life in Dallas, where he is a partner in the law firm of Aklin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer and Field.

Strauss announced his decision at a Dallas press conference, saying it "appeared he had done a job."

"There are many things I can do from the private sector to aid the Carter presidency," Strauss said. "I will

Robert S. Strauss

be helping plan the inauguration Jan. 20."

STRAUSS, 59, said he would help Carter and his aides to fill administration posts.

"The formation of a new administration means the location of several hundred new persons to fill posts."

He said Carter plans "sweeping" changes during his term.

Strauss said he told Carter three days ago he will remain chairman until one day after Carter's inauguration Jan. 20. In early December, he will call a meeting of the national committee to select a new chairman.

He said he would give Carter his recommendation for his successor.

"GOV. CARTER and I agreed that I would remain through the campaign and that after it I would leave," Strauss said.

Strauss said he was not interested in running for governor nor would he seek an office in the Carter administration.

Strauss said 10 days before last Tuesday's election he was worried Carter might not carry Texas. But, he said, Carter's swing through the state during the last days appeared to make the difference in the outcome.

He praised the president-elect as "compassionate, serious and tough-minded." "He also has one tremendous asset outside of a very high IQ. Jimmy Carter just doesn't believe there are any unsolvable problems," Strauss said. "He just believes problems are solvable."

Nature sanctuary shapes up

Schaumburg's Spring Valley Nature Sanctuary is beginning to take shape near Plum Grove and Schaumburg roads.

Extensive planting has been started by the Schaumburg Park District with the help of a $2,000 grant from the Illinois Bicentennial Commission.

The project was undertaken as a Bicentennial effort by the village and park district.

Trees and shrubs worth $5,000 have been donated by Schaumburg Rotary Club members who also have been helping plant their donations.

SCHAUMBURG'S RECENTLY organized Jayteens are seeking members between the ages of 13 and 19. Membership is open to teens living in Schaumburg, Hoffman Estates and surrounding communities.

broke twice, and as a youngster, he had to find things to entertain himself.

When he was about 12, he got an unwanted engine from his uncle's farm, attached it to a bicycle and made himself a motorbike.

"I'M NOT AFRAID to ask a question," he said. "That's the trouble with half the people. They're too embarrassed to admit they don't know."

Mayenschein took one more drag of his cigar and glanced to the other room.

Rows of finished clocks lined the far wall. They were undergoing a four-day test. The buzz of a saw filtered into Mayenschein's office as his employees continued putting together more clocks.

"I don't know where it'll end," he said. "I just don't know."
He could only imagine.

THE TIME is 2:39 as Harley Mayenschein, 52, of Schaumburg puts the final touches on one of his "Idle Time" clocks. The clock, which he invented last winter, tells time by the number of ball bearings on each row. The top represents minutes; the middle, five-minute intervals; and the bottom, hours. A motorized arm brings a ball from the bottom of the clock to the top row once each minute. When a row fills, the ramp tips, sending one ball to the next ramp, the rest to the bottom of the clock.

Students need more practical experience: report

by HOLLY HANSON

While local educators adamantly support the idea of sending students into the community to gain practical experience as a necessary part of their education, a U.S. Office of Education report recommending a gradual shortening of the school day received mixed reactions.

"Certainly it isn't an 8-to-4 day anymore," said Roderick McLennan, associate superintendent for instructional services for High School Dist. 214. "But I really don't see how we could change the hours and provide the courses that students want to take."

About 1,000 to 2,000 students participate in Dist. 214's community resource program each year, he said, and each of the district's eight buildings has its own community resources person who places students in a practical setting in the community.

"Every course ought to relate to a career," he said, explaining that chemistry students have gone to Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, to work with chemists there while social studies students have worked with children in local elementary schools.

EVEN HIGH SCHOOL students, who might be expected to look favorably on the chance to spend less time sitting in the classroom, seemed unenthusiastic about the shorter day.

"I like it (school) the way it is," said Prospect High School sophomore Art Granzler. "We're allowed to do that (work in the community) now. Next year, or the year after that, there's an electronics work-study course I can take."

Other students questioned the entire program, asking, "What happens to school activities?" "Would you get to choose a program for yourself?" and "How much homework is there?"

In High School Dist. 207 schools, students have the opportunity to visit local political candidates, tour art museums, perform in choral groups and bands and work with private industries in the community, said Michael Myers, assistant superintendent of instruction.

"People in the community want to help," he said. "But their first priority is to themselves, to earn a living. Then, it's to help the company make a profit." Industries will hire and train students, he said, as long as a succession of student workers helps the business.

"Basically, we support having kids learn in the community, but there has to be a balance," he said. Spending only two to four hours in the classroom "sounds kind of low to me," he said.

INFORMAL VOCATIONAL counseling, career-related clubs and work-study programs help students in High School Dist. 211 learn outside the school, said Gerald Chapman, assistant to the superintendent.

"Each school has a vocational counselor who coordinates a student's interests with someone in the community," he said.

The district also gives students the chance to work with cosmetologists, assist in the early education program in a local elementary district and take physical education classes off-campus "to let them see what opportunities are available," he said.

Although Dist. 211 planned to develop a professional careers program with Dist. 214, which would have allowed students to observe and assist community professionals, a state aid cut forced the program to be cancelled, he said.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A new report on education says American high schools have become "social aging vats" in which students spend too much time at academic work and not enough learning to cope with the world outside.

It recommends gradual shifts to classroom days of only two to four hours, freeing students to spend more time at such practical pursuits as observing community government and helping to run their own schools.

"Both as an institution and as a social concept, the American high school will remain the keystone of this nation's educational system," says the 142-page report prepared for the U.S.

Office of Education. "However, it requires orderly reform."

AS IT IS NOW, the report said, high schools "have become social 'aging vats' that have isolated adolescents and delayed their opportunity to learn adult roles, work habits and skills."

The report was prepared by a panel of academicians, researchers, school superintendents and students. It was described as the first comprehensive study of high school education in a decade.

They recommended eventually reducing the length of the high school academic day to two to four hours, starting with seniors and working down to other grade levels as opportunities become available for outside study of the arts, media and other fields.

"A two-to-four-hour day is a necessary concentration of effort by the musician, football player, dancer, politician or scientist," the report said. "The present all-day high school is a costly intruder on this need for both time and program variety."

THE REPORT said students freed of classroom time could, among other things, become part of "a permanent group of citizen volunteers... whose function should be to observe, investigate and to report publicly on all government operations, not as tattletales but as concerned citizens."

The report also says the schools should give students the chance to try, and fail, in the art of self-government.

"The schools need to be laboratories for error in learning the roles of citizens," the report said. "This means realistic participation in the operation and management of the school."

"It is the only fail-safe institution available for learning the consequences of neglect, venality and the appeals of power. Studied experiments in such consequences should be part of the schools' curriculum in citizenship," it said.

Weekend paper drive

The Young Peoples Club of the Church of the Holy Spirit will have a paper drive Saturday and Sunday at the church, 504 Iverson Ln.

Bundled newspapers should be dropped at the front door of the church, near Bode and Springinguth roads.

Proceeds from the drive will be used for church youth activities and basketball.

For more information, call Vince Gasperitis, 882-6637.

Free movies at library

The alphabet will be featured in free movies for children to be shown Saturday at Schaumburg Township Public Library.

"Alphabet," an animated romp through the letters of the alphabet, "The Shout It Out Alphabet Film," and "Zachary Zween," the story of a child who is always alphabetically last, will be presented.

The movies will be from 10:30 to 11 a.m. at the main library, 32 W. Library Ln., Schaumburg, and from 1:30 to 2 p.m. at the Hoffman Estates branch library, 469 Hassell Rd.

Chicago woman, 26, charged with arson

A 26-year-old Chicago woman has been arrested by police for an alleged attempted arson of the Schaumburg Green apartment complex, 1221 Cambria Dr.

Kathy D. Johnson, 3233 N. Laramie St., was taken into custody after she allegedly ignited a small fire Sunday at the apartment door of Jeanette Pieper, 26.

Mrs. Johnson was charged with criminal damage to property and a felony count of arson. She is scheduled to appear at 9:30 a.m. Dec. 1 in the Schaumburg branch of the Cook County Circuit Court.

Mrs. Johnson was released after posting a $2,000 bond Sunday night for the alleged offenses.

Athletic field plan appears shaky

A request to install several athletic fields near the Egan Water Treatment Plant appears to be on shaky ground.

The Metropolitan Sanitary District has deferred action on the Hoffman Estates Athletic Assn. request until two nearby villages approve the project.

Both Elk Grove Village and Schaumburg have withheld approval until receiving more information. However, an MSD official said that is up to the villages to research the matter.

"WE'RE NOT GOING to do anything until such time as the villages say it's OK," said Edward Lea, assistant real estate administrator for the MSD. "We don't want to get caught in battles with the villages."

In Schaumburg's response to the proposal, last week, the village said it objects to the plan "until such time as some sort of public hearing is held."

Lea said that if a public hearing is to be held, Schaumburg, not the MSD, would host it.

Schaumburg Village Mgr. John E. Coste said the village has no plans for a public hearing.

WILLIAM BRILLIANT, president of the athletic association, was unavailable for comment.

The association is requesting permission from the MSD to use the 10 acres near the treatment plant, Meacham and Schaumburg roads, for baseball, softball, football, soccer and track.

"We were and always have been willing to grant the permit," Lea said, noting that the MSD has granted permission for Little League baseball at other locations. However, he said no permission will be granted without the approval of the two neighboring villages.

Hoffman Estates-Schaumburg

Schaumburg Twp. Dist. 54

A book fair and hobby show will be conducted in the gymnasium at Hoover School, 315 S. Springinguth Rd., Schaumburg, from 7 to 9 p.m. today and during school hours Wednesday.

Judging the hobby show will be Mayor Raymond Kessel of Schaumburg, Dist. 54 School Board member Esther Karras and Duane Hosmer, recreation superintendent for Schaumburg Park District.

Proceeds from the book fair will be used to purchase books for the school library.

Terry Sullivan, a representative of the Cook County State's Attorney's office will speak at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday at Hale School, 1300 W. Wise Rd., Schaumburg.

Sullivan will speak on shoplifting and what happens when a child gets in trouble.

Elk Grove Twp. Dist. 59

The students of Stevenson School, 1414 Armstrong Ln., Elk Grove Village, have invited their parents to an open house today.

Following a short PTA meeting at 7:30 p.m. in the school gymnasium, the children will escort their parents on a guided tour of the building, visiting classrooms, the media center and other special study areas where teachers will be available for general information.

Teen-age mothers receive help

by SHERYL JEDLINSKI

Barbara's son was born the day after her 18th birthday, and it has been them against the world ever since.

Her husband deserted her when she was five months pregnant — the last time she received any money or heard from him. She got her divorce without ever talking to him about it.

Her son is 14 months old and lives with Barbara and her grandmother in Arlington Heights. Barbara earns $82 a week babysitting and cleaning house in Barrington, and somehow they make it from week to week.

THE HOSPITAL BILLS for having him still are unpaid, but Barbara sends the hospital installments whenever she can. If she needs a new pair of shoes or if she needs glasses, ends just don't meet that month.

Life has been somewhat easier for Barbara's friend, Maria, who also got pregnant at 17, but chose to give her baby up for adoption rather than keep him herself.

Unmarried, she feared her baby would be severely diabetic like his father and she wouldn't be able to afford insulin for him. She envisioned herself working all day, paying a babysitter most of her earnings and then having no time left for either the baby or herself.

A few months after she gave up her baby, Maria met her husband. Now at 19 she has a 4-month-old daughter and lives in a comfortable apartment with a man who was willing to forget her past and start fresh.

ALTHOUGH BARBARA and Maria chose different solutions to the same problem, both believe they did right by themselves and their babies. They say they wouldn't have been as prepared to make the choice without the aid of classes for pregnant teen-agers offered by high school districts 211 and 214.

The classes are a local response to the growing national problem of teenage pregnancies. In the past 15 years, the number of live babies born to mothers under 16 rose 75 per cent, from 26,000 in 1960 to 46,000 in 1974, according to a report by the National Foundation-March of Dimes.

For teen-age mothers like Barbara who decide to keep their babies, loneliness and finances are constant problems.

Barbara applied for welfare, but was told she didn't qualify. They said she would have to reduce her $2,500 life insurance policy to $1,000 if she wanted to be eligible, but she refused.

"I HAD NO SAVINGS account and the life insurance policy was the only security I had for my son," she says. "As it is, it isn't much security."

She often thinks about going after a better paying job, but worries if she found one she'd have to leave the boy in someone else's care and she doesn't want to do that. Watching her son grow is her life right now and she goes almost nowhere without him.

Social occasions don't come up often, however, and loneliness plagues her even more than finances. She has matured too fast for girls her own age, but at 19, it'll be another two years before she's old enough to join Parents Without Partners or Young Single Parents.

"You become a nowhere person," Barbara says. "Where can you go to meet other single teen-age parents?"

Sometimes Barbara wonders if it wouldn't have been better for both herself and her baby if she had had the courage to give him up for adoption. He'd have two parents rather

DESPITE THE LONELINESS, the financial problems and the overwhelming sense of responsibility associated with being a single teen-age parent, 19-year-old Barbara says she would not give up her 14-month-old son for the world.

To begin fund drive

Group wins legal battle to solicit

A Chicago environmental group has won its legal battle with the City of Rolling Meadows and plans to start a door-to-door fund drive within two weeks.

Because the city's license committee refused to consider the group's application for a solicitor's permit, Rolling Meadows was one of 19 suburbs sued by Citizens for a Better Environment.

Federal Judge Prentice H. Marshall Monday approved an agreement allowing CBE to apply for a permit. Police Chief Lewis R. Case said permits no longer are awarded by the committee, but are approved after a routine background check.

CBE HAS BEEN in court for more than a year challenging local decisions that barred its fund-raising drives. Monday's agreement does not affect CBE's lawsuit against Palatine, Schaumburg or 16 other suburban villages.

Ald. William Ahrens, 2nd, was chairman of the license committee when it refused to consider CBE's application for a permit. He said the panel feared the city would be overrun with out-of-town solicitors.

"Half of them are so damned phony it sickens me," he said. "We made it a practice to issue solicitors' permits only to local not-for-profit groups like the Boy Scouts."

But Rose said the city's ordinance does not limit permits to local organizations. "Rather than try the case further, the city will allow the group to apply," he said.

"We check out the group and make sure it is a legitimate, state-licensed operation," Case said. "If it meets the requirements, we issue a license."

"CBE'S LARRY HOELLWARTH said the group will apply for a permit this week and expects to have its solicitors on the streets within two weeks."

Others around the V-shaped bar

He said he expects settlements with Palatine and Schaumburg by Dec. 2 "one way or the other."

Everette Hill, an attorney for Palatine, said the village's ordinance has been changed recently "to conform with all the constitutional requirements."

Although the village has not settled with CBE, he said, the new amendments may make the suit meaningless. "If they meet village requirements and apply properly for a permit, they would be allowed to solicit now," he said.

SCHAUMBURG ONCE allowed CBE to solicit donations but withheld a permit in 1975, complaining that nearly half of the donations went for CBE administrative expenses and to pay CBE solicitors.

Hoellwarth Monday said 35 per cent of the donations go for administrative and fund-raising expenses and the remainder "to fight for the environment."

Hoellwarth said CBE solicitors will distribute environmental protection literature and forms for reporting pollution problems when they canvass for donations.

New owners plan no changes at Erich's

PAUL GORES

Shortly after 10 a.m. 15 persons were sitting around the bar at Erich's Restaurant, 15 N. Brockway St., Palatine.

One woman washed down her shot of whisky with a glass of white soda before going out into the stinging morning wind. "Time to pay the telephone and electric bills," she said as she slowly walked to the door.

Others around the V-shaped bar watched amused as a man lost his patience while trying to peel tiny pieces of shell from a hard-boiled egg. One old man sat silently as he downed "the usual," a shot of brandy and a beer.

This is Erich's — a country bar in a downtown setting. No flashing lights, no glass dance floors, no row of air hockey tables or noisy coin-operated machines.

SIMPLICITY, FRIENDLINESS and food have made Rick's a popular spot with Village of Palatine employees and residents for 16 years.

Rich Bartsch said the scene and atmosphere of Erich's are the things he will miss when he gives up ownership of the restaurant. He is selling Erich's to work full-time at his other business in Palatine, The Corporation Restaurant in the Palatine Plaza.

New plates may be OK, but save old

A Herald Staff Report
Written by Bill Hill

Depending on where you're driving, it may be OK to have your car wearing the new green and white 1977 license plates.

But don't throw the old Bicentennial ones away yet; some guy in blue may order you to put them back on.

Most Northwest suburban police chiefs have decided to make the best of a confusing situation and not issue tickets to Illinois motorists for displaying 1977 license plates early. The Illinois State Police decided last week that it is legal for motorists to change to the new plates, but Sec. of State Michael Howlett insists the deadline for switching is still Dec. 1.

THE ONLY alternatives most local police chiefs see available to them is to look the other way when cars with the green-and-white 1977 plates go by, or stop them and ask drivers to change back to the red, white and blues until Dec. 1.

It is unlikely that citations will be issued.

"When they do things like this, they only create confusion and put the people in the middle," said Des Plaines Police Chief Arthur Hinz, who says his department will adopt an "educational and warning" approach. "With all this confusion, we won't issue tickets," he said.

The one million sets of license plates already mailed by Howlett's office include a notice that they cannot be used before Dec. 1. This has been the procedure for as long as Howlett's spokesmen can remember.

Strauss to quit as Democratic Party chief

DALLAS (UPI) — Democratic National Chairman Robert S. Strauss, credited with bringing the party from the defeat of George McGovern in 1972 to Jimmy Carter's victory, said Monday he will leave office Jan. 21.

Strauss, chairman since 1972, called his decision not to seek another term "irrevocable."

"I have done this for four years. I'm tired. I'm ready for someone else to go on."

Strauss said he made the announcement because of constant questions about whether he would continue to serve after Carter takes office.

"IT WAS MY intention before very long to call a meeting of the Democratic National Committee," he said. "The primary purpose of the meeting would be to select a new and different chairman. I had discussed this with Governor Carter and his staff and they agreed."

He said he would not seek a post in the Carter administration. He will return to private life in Dallas, where he is a partner in the law firm of Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer and Field.

Strauss announced his decision at a Dallas press conference, saying it "appeared he had done a job."

"There are many things I can do from the private sector to aid the Carter presidency," Strauss said. "I will be helping plan the inauguration Jan. 20."

STRAUSS, 59, said he would help Carter and his aides to fill administration posts.

"The formation of a new administration means the location of several hundred new persons to fill posts."

He said Carter plans "sweeping" changes during his term.

Strauss said he told Carter three days ago he will remain chairman until one day after Carter's inauguration Jan. 20. In early December, he will call a meeting of the national committee to select a new chairman.

He said he would give Carter his recommendation for his successor.

"GOV. CARTER and I agreed that I would remain through the campaign and that after it I would leave," Strauss said.

Strauss said he was not interested in running for governor nor would he seek an office in the Carter administration.

Strauss said 10 days before last Tuesday's election he was worried Carter might not carry Texas. But, he said, Carter's swing through the state during the last days appeared to make the difference in the outcome.

Inventor won't let clock run out—success at 52

by JOHN LAMPINEN

At the stroke of 1 o'clock, the "big dump" begins. A shiny ball bearing drops from the minute-hand of Harley Mayenschein's clock onto the top ramp.

The ramp tips. Metal balls rush out, around the curve. Plunk. A second ramp tips. More balls rush around another curve. One lands on a third ramp. It tilts.

The balls crash into line at the bottom of the machine. An arm reaches down, plucks a ball from the line, and begins its slow circular movement to the top.

MAYENSCHNEIN TOOK a drag on his stogie and remembered how they said he had no imagination.

It wasn't his age that bothered the personnel managers at the large toy factory. The firm wouldn't hire him, he was told, because it needed men with imagination.

"It kind of makes me chuckle when I think about it," Mayenschein said, fingering the clock on his desk with a dirty, inventor's fingernail.

But two years ago, it was no laughing matter.

Mayenschein was 50 then. He had been out of work three months, a victim of the recession. And being classified a senior engineer on the wrong side of 45, he wondered if he would ever be able to find another job.

"I had a hard time landing one, to be truthful," the Schaumburg inventor recalled.

HE FINALLY got an offer from an engineering firm in Downers Grove. There was security in the job.

But four months ago, Mayenschein gave up the security. He decided to quit and take his chances in the business world.

The wooden clock that doesn't look like a clock was the key. It is his invention, the latest in a series, but the first he decided to mass produce.

He opened up "Idle Tyme," a small factory that originated in his garage for the purpose of turning out those $75 ball bearing clocks made more for watching than telling time.

The decision to quit wasn't reached easily, Mayenschein said. He reached it only after discussing the situation with his wife.

"It isn't the first time (you've been without a job)," she told him, "so let's take a flier."

MAYENSCHNEIN PLACED the cigar in an ash tray and leaned back in his chair.

The idea for the clock came to him last January, he said. He was fixing his granddaughter's gumball machine, and as those gumballs rolled around, something clicked in his mind.

Mayenschein used no drawings to turn his idea into substance. Four months of evening and weekend work later, the 300 pieces fit together, and he had his clock.

The clock has no hands. But it does have an arm.

The arm takes precisely a minute to go around. When it does, it drops a ball bearing on the top ramp. That ramp represents minutes and tips when it receives the fifth ball.

The middle ramp represents five-minute intervals. The bottom represents hours. Both tilt under the weight of 12 bearings.

When a ramp fills and tips, the ball bearings rush around a curve to the side, one of them dropping onto the next ramp below.

AT 12:59, ALL of the ramps are filled. When the ball drops, making it 1 o'clock, all the ramps clear in what Mayenschein referred to as the "big dump."

The clock is made for clock watchers, not time keepers. If he insists, the owner can tell the time by counting the balls on each ramp. Most seem to prefer watching and listening.

He decided to try to sell the clocks on his own, he said, after he took it to a tavern in Schaumburg. Within minutes, he had about 40 orders from other patrons.

Mayenschein ran his fingers through his hair and shook his head.

"I've had different ideas, and then I didn't do anything about them because of the money, the capital, and about a year or so later the thing winds up on the market," he said.

THE TIME is 2:39 as Harley Mayenschein, 52, of Schaumburg puts the final touches on one of his "Idle Tyme" clocks. The clock, which he invented last winter, tells time by the number of ball bearings on each row. The top represents minutes; the middle, five-minute intervals; and the bottom, hours. A motorized arm brings a ball from the bottom of the clock to the top row once each minute. When a row fills, the ramp tips, sending one ball to the next ramp, the rest to the bottom of the clock.

"Everyone who saw one of the clocks wanted one, so I thought I'd go into business and see what happens."

GOOD THINGS have happened. He started his factory with his son in the family garage in August. A month later, he moved into larger quarters.

Then a month ago, he moved into the 2,000-square-foot facility at 1119 Tower Rd., Schaumburg. He has eight persons working for him.

Clocks have been shipped to Minnesota, Puerto Rico, Florida, Canada, Louisiana and throughout the Northwest suburbs. He has back orders for about 160.

Even before his layoff a couple of years ago, he knew what hard times were. He grew up in Wisconsin during the Great Depression. His father went broke twice, and as a youngster, he had to find things to entertain himself.

When he was about 12, he got an unwanted engine from his uncle's farm, attached it to a bicycle and made himself a motor-bike.

"I'M NOT AFRAID to ask a question," he said. "That's the trouble with half the people. They're too embarrassed to admit they don't know."

Mayenschein took one more drag of his cigar and glanced to the other room.

Rows of finished clocks lined the far wall. They were undergoing a four-day test. The buzz of a saw filtered into Mayenschein's office as his employees continued putting together more clocks.

"I don't know where it'll end," he said. "I just don't know." He could only imagine.

Students need more practical experience: report

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A new report on education says American high schools have become "social aging vats" in which students spend too much time at academic work and not enough learning to cope with the world outside.

It recommends gradual shifts to classroom days of only two to four hours, freeing students to spend more time at such practical pursuits as observing community government and helping to run their own schools.

"Both as an institution and as a social concept, the American high school will remain the keystone of this nation's educational system," says the 142-page report prepared for the U.S.

Office of Education. "However, it requires orderly reform."

AS IT IS NOW, the report said, high schools "have become social 'aging vats' that have isolated adolescents and delayed their opportunity to learn adult roles, work habits and skills."

The report was prepared by a panel of academicians, researchers, school superintendents and students. It was described as the first comprehensive study of high school education in a decade.

They recommended eventually reducing the length of the high school academic day to two to four hours, starting with seniors and working down to other grade levels as opportunities become available for outside study of the arts, media and other fields.

"A two-to-four-hour day is a necessary concentration of effort by the musician, football player, dancer, politician or scientist," the report said. "The present all-day high school is a costly intruder on this need for both time and program variety."

THE REPORT said students freed of classroom time could, among other things, become part of "a permanent group of citizen volunteers... whose function should be to observe, investigate and to report publicly on all government operations, not as tattletales but as concerned citizens."

The report also says the schools should give students the chance to try, and fail, in the art of self-government.

"The schools need to be laboratories for error in learning the roles of citizens," the report said. "This means realistic participation in the operation and management of the school."

"It is the only fail-safe institution available for learning the consequences of neglect, venality and the appeals of power. Studied experiments in such consequences should be part of the schools' curriculum in citizenship," it said.

Palatine-Meadows Dist. 15

"Where does the responsibility lie for alcoholism and drug dependency?" will be the topic for a discussion led by Roger Boekenbauer, unit director for the Northwest suburbs of Alcoholism Drug Dependence Program at 8 p.m. Wednesday at Lincoln School, 1021 Ridgewood Ln., Palatine.

The open meeting is sponsored by the school's Parent Education Committee. For further information call Virginia Franczyk, 358-6668.

Pleasant Hill School will conduct a used book sale Nov. 17. Donations of children's books may be brought to the school, 434 W. Illinois, Palatine, or contact Jean Book, 359-0396, to arrange for pickup.

High School Dist. 211

Bus service for parents wishing to attend the state cross country meet in Peoria Saturday will be provided by the Fremd Viking Boosters.

The bus will leave Fremd High School, 1000 S. Quentin Rd., Palatine, at 6:30 a.m. and will return to the school at about 5 p.m. The cost is $6 per person. Young children are welcome to ride the parent bus, but high school students should plan to ride the student pep bus, which costs $2.

Checks should be made payable to the Fremd Boosters and may be dropped off at the school.

High School Dist. 214

Twelve Rolling Meadows High School students have been selected to participate in the district festival of the Illinois Music Educators Assn., Saturday at Oak Park High School.

They are: Dave Hill, Don Ewald, Dave Mester, Peggy Oman, Jon Gauger, Carrie Bahe, Liz Helie, Mark Livingood, Nick Betzold, Mary Monroe, Cecilia Hooper and Rod Jay.

The group will be accompanied by their music directors, Lendell Kling, Richard Kennell and Fred Schimmelmann.

Sacred Heart High School

Parents of students at Sacred Heart of Mary High School are invited to a religion discussion at 7:30 p.m. today at the school, 2800 Central Rd., Rolling Meadows.

"The Church Teaches: But I Think, Where Am I?" will be the topic of discussion led by Joe Lane, religion instructor.

Parents planning to attend are asked to call the school, 392-6880. Parents of eighth-grade students also are invited.

Educators, students say shorter day not answer

by HOLLY HANSON

While local educators adamantly support the idea of sending students into the community to gain practical experience as a necessary part of their education, a U.S. Office of Education report recommending a gradual shortening of the school day received mixed reactions.

"Certainly it isn't an 8-to-4 day anymore," said Roderick McLennan, associate superintendent for instructional services for High School Dist.

214. "But I really don't see how we could change the hours and provide the courses that students want to take."

About 1,000 to 2,000 students participate in Dist. 214's community resource program each year, he said, and each of the district's eight buildings has its own community resources person who places students in a practical setting in the community.

"Every course ought to relate to a career," he said, explaining that chemistry students have gone to Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, to work with chemists there while social studies students have worked with children in local elementary schools.

EVEN HIGH SCHOOL students, who might be expected to look favorably on the chance to spend less time sitting in the classroom, seemed unenthusiastic about the shorter day.

"I like it (school) the way it is," said Prospect High School sophomore Art Granzier. "We're allowed to do that (work in the community) now."

Next year, or the year after that, there's an electronics work-study course I can take."

New owners plan no changes at Erich's

contact with people," Bartsch said. "I kind of miss that. I enjoy people."

But Bartsch said it was necessary to sell Erich's so he could spend more time with his family.

"It's a super business, but having two places just got to be too much of a hassle," Bartsch said.

ERICH'S WILL remain open and will be serving the same hamburgers, which one patron called "the best in town."

The granting of liquor license to the new owners, Jack Nicol and James Rogan, is pending before the Palatine Village Board. The village zoning board of appeals has recommended the license be granted to the new owners.

Bartsch said Erich's was a popular place when his now deceased father, for whom it was named, took it over in 1968.

"I just think it's the type of place you can come in and meet your friends — it's the congeniality of it," Bartsch said.

He said a large morning turnout at the bar is not unusual. Sometimes it is crowded with factory employees who come in following work on the night shift, he said.

Erich's still sells hard-boiled eggs from the bar, a feature seldom seen in taverns anymore.

"IT'S JUST traditional for us," Bartsch said. "Twenty years ago almost every tavern had eggs on the bar."

Bartsch's mother will stay on as cook at Erich's. He said she and several other employees have been running the kitchen in the rear of the building since his father bought the bar and restaurant 10 years ago.

"I love to cook," Bartsch said, "but I never got a chance to. You just can't invade your mother's kitchen."

Bartsch said he opens his new restaurant at 6 a.m., just as he has at Erich's for the past 10 years. He said although the sale of Erich's means a dip in his income, business is "starting to pick up."

"I BUILT UP A reputation for good food," he said.

Bartsch said in a few years he might move to Colorado and open up a bar or restaurant. But for now he's concentrating on his new business.

"In a way I hated to give it up," Bartsch said of his ownership at Erich's. "They've got a super business there. Eventually I think they'll change a little. With new people, new ideas, it's bound to happen."

But new owner Nicol used two words to list the changes he will make at the popular restaurant and bar: "None whatsoever."

Teen-age mothers receive help

by SHERYL JEDLINSKI

Barbara's son was born the day after her 18th birthday, and it has been them against the world ever since.

Her husband deserted her when she was five months pregnant — the last time she received any money or heard from him. She got her divorce without ever talking to him about it.

Her son is 14 months old and lives with Barbara and her grandmother in Arlington Heights. Barbara earns $82 a week babysitting and cleaning house in Barrington, and somehow they make it from week to week.

THE HOSPITAL BILLS for having him still are unpaid, but Barbara sends the hospital installments whenever she can. If she needs a new pair of shoes or if she needs glasses, ends just don't meet that month.

Life has been somewhat easier for Barbara's friend, Maria, who also got pregnant at 17, but chose to give her baby up for adoption rather than keep him herself.

Unmarried, she feared her baby would be severely diabetic like his father and she wouldn't be able to afford insulin for him. She envisioned herself working all day, paying a babysitter most of her earnings and then having no time left for either the baby or herself.

A few months after she gave up her baby, Maria met her husband. Now at 19 she has a 4-month-old daughter and lives in a comfortable apartment with a man who was willing to forget her past and start fresh.

ALTHOUGH BARBARA and Maria chose different solutions to the same problem, both believe they did right by themselves and their babies. They say they wouldn't have been as prepared to make the choice without the aid of classes for pregnant teen-agers offered by high school districts 211 and 214.

The classes are a local response to the growing national problem of teen-age pregnancies. In the past 15 years, the number of live babies born to mothers under 16 rose 75 per cent, from 26,000 in 1960 to 46,000 in 1974, according to a report by the National Foundation-March of Dimes.

For teen-age mothers like Barbara who decide to keep their babies, loneliness and finances are constant problems.

Barbara applied for welfare, but was told she didn't qualify. They said she would have to reduce her $2,500 life insurance policy to $1,000 if she wanted to be eligible, but she refused.

"I HAD NO SAVINGS account and the life insurance policy was the only security I had for my son," she says. "As it is, it isn't much security."

She often thinks about going after a better paying job, but worries if she found one she'd have to leave the boy in someone else's care and she doesn't want to do that. Watching her son grow is her life right now and she goes almost nowhere without him.

Social occasions don't come up often, however, and loneliness plagues her even more than finances. She has matured too fast for girls her own age, but at 19, it'll be another two years before she's old enough to join Parents Without Partners or Young Single Parents.

"You become a nowhere person," Barbara says. "Where can you go to meet other single teen-age parents?"

Sometimes Barbara wonders if it wouldn't have been better for both herself and her baby if she had had the courage to give him up for adoption. He'd have two parents rather than one.

DESPITE THE LONELINESS, the financial problems and the overwhelming sense of responsibility associated with being a single teen-age parent, 19-year-old Barbara says she would not give up her 14-month-old son for the world.

Zajonc seeks village presidency

Palatine Trustee Fred J. Zajonc, the lone maverick on the Republican village board, announced Monday night he will run for village president next April. Zajonc thus becomes the first candidate for the post since incumbent Wendell E. Jones announced in September he will not seek reelection.

In a statement released Monday night, Zajonc said he would seek support during the next two months "among citizens and groups in assessing how to proceed."

Zajonc, 61, told The Herald he is not forming a slate to run with him during the April contest, but may agree later to run with others as a group.

A 10-YEAR-VETERAN ON the village board, Zajonc waged a successful campaign for reelection two years ago as an Independent. Although slated by the Republicans in 1967, Zajonc broke from the regular township GOP organization when the Republicans in 1971 failed to slate two fellow incumbent trustees.

Zajonc said he would not appear before the local GOP convention meeting Dec. 4, but said he would accept their backing if it comes. "They know my record if they want to endorse me," Zajonc said.

He said he feels changes are needed on the board and that is his reason for seeking the top village post. He declined to offer specifics, however, on the type of campaign he will wage saying only that he will seek out support from various groups and individuals.

Zajonc said he plans to begin an active campaign in January but will keep a low profile until then. "I want to let everyone have a good Christmas and we will begin campaigning after Jan. 1," he said.

Zajonc is a resident of the Winston Park subdivision where he has lived for 15 years. A registered Republican, Zajonc is a product manager for U. S. Gypsum Co. and holds a bachelor's degree from the University of Chicago.

Home building nears record high

by LUISA GINETTI

Palatine appears headed for its best construction year in the past three years with increases in the number of new single-family homes leading the 1976 boom.

Figures released Monday by the building department showed the value of new construction in October at more than $2.247 million, the highest monthly amount for the year to date. Construction of single-family homes accounted for about $2.1 million of the figure with 47 additional new residences built last month bringing to 164 the number of new homes constructed this year in the village.

Building Director Henry Apida said most of the new home construction is taking place in the Whytecliffe subdivision on Roselle Road near Algonquin Road. Apida said single-family construction is expected to continue to increase in Palatine with the start of construction of the 72-acre Plum Grove Hills project at Quentin Road and Illinois Avenue.

APIDA SAID an official of Draper and Associates, developer of Plum Grove Hills, picked up 50 building permit applications Monday and work on the development is expected to begin soon.

Village Mgr. Anton H. Harwig said he expects the current trend to continue with adjustments during the next few months for seasonal conditions. "Not as many people will be making room additions and doing remodeling jobs in the winter," he said, "but we probably will keep pace when compared to the over-all industry."

Harwig concurred with Apida's assessment of this year's building activity compared to recent years. "The building department has had a great increase in activity over last year," he said.

October figures showed a 176 per cent increase over figures for October 1975, when only $814,950 worth of new construction was reported.

TOTAL NEW construction value through October totals more than $10.09 million, more than double the total for the first 10 months of 1975 when only $4.91 million worth of new construction was reported.

The value of new construction in Palatine for the first 10 months of 1976 has already surpassed by about $4 million the amount of new construction for the entire 1975 calendar year.

New plates may be OK, but save old

A Herald Staff Report
Written by Bill Hill

Depending on where you're driving, it may be OK to have your car wearing the new green and white 1977 license plates.

But don't throw the old Bicentennial ones away yet; some guy in blue may order you to put them back on.

Most Northwest suburban police chiefs have decided to make the best of a confusing situation and not issue tickets to Illinois motorists for displaying 1977 license plates early. The Illinois State Police decided last week that it is legal for motorists to change to the new plates, but Sec. of State Michael Howlett insists the deadline for switching is still Dec. 1.

THE ONLY alternatives most local police chiefs see available to them is to look the other way when cars with the green-and-white 1977 plates go by, or stop them and ask drivers to change back to the red, white and blues until Dec. 1.

It is unlikely that citations will be issued.

"When they do things like this, they only create confusion and put the people in the middle," said Des Plaines Police Chief Arthur Hintz, who says his department will adopt an "educational and warning" approach. "With all this confusion, we won't issue tickets," he said.

The one million sets of license plates already mailed by Howlett's office include a notice that they cannot be used before Dec. 1. This has been the procedure for as long as Howlett's spokesmen can remember.

Strauss to quit as Democratic Party chief

DALLAS (UPI) — Democratic National Chairman Robert S. Strauss, credited with bringing the party from the defeat of George McGovern in 1972 to Jimmy Carter's victory, said Monday he will leave office Jan. 21.

Strauss, chairman since 1972, called his decision not to seek another term "irrevocable."

"I have done this for four years. I'm tired. I'm ready for someone else to go on."

Strauss said he made the announcement because of constant questions about whether he would continue to serve after Carter takes office.

"IT WAS MY intention before very long to call a meeting of the Democratic National Committee," he said. "The primary purpose of the meeting would be to select a new and different chairman. I had discussed this with Governor Carter and his staff and they agreed."

He said he would not seek a post in the Carter administration. He will return to private life in Dallas, where he is a partner in the law firm of Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer and Field.

Strauss announced his decision at a Dallas press conference, saying it "appeared he had done a job."

"There are many things I can do from the private sector to aid the Carter presidency," Strauss said. "I will

Robert S. Strauss

be helping plan the inauguration Jan. 20."

STRAUSS, 59, said he would help Carter and his aides to fill administration posts.

"The formation of a new adminis- tration means the location of several hundred new persons to fill posts."

He said Carter plans "sweeping" changes during his term.

Strauss said he told Carter three days ago he will remain chairman until one day after Carter's inauguration Jan. 20. "In early December, he will call a meeting of the national committee to select a new chairman."

He said he would give Carter his recommendation for his successor.

"GOV. CARTER and I agreed that I would remain through the campaign and that after that I would leave," Strauss said.

Strauss said he was not interested in running for governor nor would he seek an office in the Carter administration.

Strauss said 10 days before last Tuesday's election he was worried Carter might not carry Texas. But, he said, Carter's swing through the state during the last days appeared to make the difference in the outcome.

He praised the president-elect as "compassionate, serious and tough-minded." "He also has one tremendous asset outside of a very high IQ. Jimmy Carter just doesn't believe there are any unsolvable problems," Strauss said. "He just believes problems are solvable."

Inventor won't let clock run out—success at 52

by JOHN LAMPINEN

At the stroke of 1 o'clock, the "big dump" begins. A shiny ball bearing drops from the minute-hand of Harley Mayenschein's clock onto the top ramp.

The ramp tips. Metal balls rush out, around the curve. Plunk. A second ramp tips. More balls rush around another curve. One lands on a third ramp. It tilts.

The balls crash into line at the bottom of the machine. An arm reaches down, plucks a ball from the line, and begins its slow circular movement to the top.

MAYENSCHIEIN TOOK a drag on his stogie and remembered how they said he had no imagination.

It wasn't his age that bothered the personnel managers at the large toy factory. The firm wouldn't hire him, he was told, because it needed men with imagination.

"It kind of makes me chuckle when I think about it," Mayenschein said, fingering the clock on his desk with a dirty, inventor's fingernail.

But two years ago, it was no laughing matter. Mayenschein was 50 then. He had been out of work three months, a victim of the recession. And being classified a senior engineer on the wrong side of 45, he wondered if he would ever be able to find another job.

"I had a hard time landing one, to be truthful," the Schaumburg inventor recalled.

HE FINALLY got an offer from an engineering firm in Downers Grove. There was security in the job.

But four months ago, Mayenschein gave up the security. He decided to quit and take his chances in the business world.

The wooden clock that doesn't look like a clock was the key. It is his invention, the latest in a series, but the first he decided to mass produce.

He opened up "Idle Tyme," a small factory that originated in his garage for the purpose of turning out those $75 ball bearing clocks made more for watching than telling time.

The decision to quit wasn't reached easily, Mayenschein said. He reached it only after discussing the situation with his wife.

"It isn't the first time (you've been without a job)," she told him, "so let's take a flier."

MAYENSCHIEIN PLACED the cigar in an ash tray and leaned back in his chair.

The idea for the clock came to him last January, he said. He was fixing his granddaughter's gumball machine, and as those gumballs rolled around, something clicked in his mind.

Mayenschein used no drawings to turn his idea into substance. Four months of evening and weekend work later, the 300 pieces fit together, and he had his clock.

The clock has no hands. But it does have an arm.

The arm takes precisely a minute to go around. When it does, it drops a ball bearing on the top ramp. That ramp represents minutes and tips when it receives the fifth ball.

The middle ramp represents five-minute intervals. The bottom represents hours. Both tilt under the weight of 12 bearings.

When a ramp fills and tips, the ball bearings rush around a curve to the side, one of them dropping onto the next ramp below.

AT 12:59, ALL of the ramps are filled. When the ball drops making it 1 o'clock, all the ramps clear in what Mayenschein referred to as the "big dump."

The clock is made for clock watchers, not time keepers. If he insists, the owner can tell the time by counting the balls on each ramp. Most seem to prefer watching and listening.

He decided to try to sell the clocks on his own, he said, after he took it to a tavern in Schaumburg. Within minutes, he had about 40 orders from other patrons.

Mayenschein ran his fingers through his hair and shook his head.

"I've had different ideas, and then I didn't do anything about them because of the money, the capital, and about a year or so later the thing winds up on the market," he said.

THE TIME is 2:39 as Harley Mayenschein, 52, of Schaumburg puts the final touches on one of his "Idle Tyme" clocks. The clock, which he invented last winter, tells time by the number of ball bearings on each row. The top represents minutes; the middle, five-minute intervals; and the bottom, hours. A motorized arm brings a ball from the bottom of the clock to the top row once each minute. When a row fills, the ramp tips, sending one ball to the next ramp, the rest to the bottom of the clock.

"Everyone who saw one of the clocks wanted one, so I thought I'd go into business and see what happens."

GOOD THINGS have happened. He started his factory with his son in the family garage in August. A month later, he moved into larger quarters.

Then a month ago, he moved into the 2,000-square-foot facility at 1119 Tower Rd., Schaumburg. He has eight persons working for him.

Clocks have been shipped to Minnesota, Puerto Rico, Florida, Canada, Louisiana and throughout the Northwest suburbs. He has back orders for about 160.

Even before his layoff a couple of years ago, he knew what hard times were. He grew up in Wisconsin during the Great Depression. His father went broke twice, and as a youngster, he had to find things to entertain himself.

When he was about 12, he got an unwanted engine from his uncle's farm, attached it to a bicycle and made himself a motor-bike.

"I'M NOT AFRAID to ask a question," he said. "That's the trouble with half the people. They're too embarrassed to admit they don't know."

Mayenschein took one more drag of his cigar and glanced to the other room.

Rows of finished clocks lined the far wall. They were undergoing a four-day test. The buzz of a saw filtered into Mayenschein's office as his employees continued putting together more clocks.

"I don't know where it'll end," he said. "I just don't know." He could only imagine.

Students need more practical experience: report

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A new report on education says American high schools have become "social aging vats" in which students spend too much time at academic work and not enough learning to cope with the world outside.

It recommends gradual shifts to classroom days of only two to four hours, freeing students to spend more time at such practical pursuits as observing community government and helping to run their own schools.

"Both as an institution and as a social concept, the American high school will remain the keystone of this nation's educational system," says the 142-page report prepared for the U.S.

"The Church Teaches: But I Think, Where Am I?" will be the topic of discussion led by Joe Lane, religion instructor.

Parents planning to attend are asked to call the school, 392-6880. Parents of eighth-grade students also are invited.

Educators, students say shorter day not answer

by HOLLY HANSON

While local educators adamantly support the idea of sending students into the community to gain practical experience as a necessary part of their education, a U.S. Office of Education report recommending a gradual shortening of the school day received mixed reactions.

"Certainly it isn't an 8-to-4 day anymore," said Roderick McLennan, associate superintendent for instructional services for High School Dist. 214. "But I really don't see how we could change the hours and provide the courses that students want to take."

About 1,000 to 2,000 students participate in Dist. 214's community resource program each year, he said, and each of the district's eight buildings has its own community resources person who places students in a practical setting in the community.

"Every course ought to relate to a career," he said, explaining that chemistry students have gone to Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, to work with chemists there while social studies students have worked with children in local elementary schools.

EVEN HIGH SCHOOL students, who might be expected to look favorably on the chance to spend less time sitting in the classroom, seemed unenthusiastic about the shorter day.

"I like it (school) the way it is," said Prospect High School sophomore Art Granzetzer. "We're allowed to do that (work in the community) now. Next year, or the year after that, there's an electronics work-study course I can take."

Other students questioned the entire program, asking, "What happens to school activities?" "Would you get to choose a program for yourself?" and "How much homework is there?"

In High School Dist. 207 schools, students have the opportunity to visit local political candidates, tour art museums, perform in choral groups and bands and work with private industries in the community, said Michael Myers, assistant superintendent of instruction.

"People in the community want to help," he said. "But their first priority is to themselves, to earn a living. Then, it's to help the company make a profit." Industries will hire and train students, he said, as long as a succession of student workers helps the business.

"Basically, we support having kids learn in the community, but there has to be a balance," he said. Spending only two to four hours in the classroom "sounds kind of low to me," he said.

INFORMAL VOCATIONAL counseling, career-related clubs and work-study programs help students in High School Dist. 211 learn outside the school, said Gerald Chapman, assistant to the superintendent.

New plates may be OK, but save old

A Herald Staff Report
Written by Bill Hill

Depending on where you're driving, it may be OK to have your car wearing the new green and white 1977 license plates.

But don't throw the old Bicentennial ones away yet; some guy in blue may order you to put them back on.

Most Northwest suburban police chiefs have decided to make the best of a confusing situation and not issue tickets to Illinois motorists for displaying 1977 license plates early. The Illinois State Police decided last week that it is legal for motorists to change to the new plates, but Sec. of State Michael Howlett insists the deadline for switching is still Dec. 1.

THE ONLY alternatives most local police chiefs see available to them is to look the other way when cars with the green-and-white 1977 plates go by, or stop them and ask drivers to change back to the red, white and blue until Dec. 1.

It is unlikely that citations will be issued.

"When they do things like this, they only create confusion and put the people in the middle," said Des Plaines Police Chief Arthur Hintz, who says his department will adopt an "educational and warning" approach. "With all this confusion, we won't issue tickets," he said.

The one million sets of license plates already mailed by Howlett's office include a notice that they cannot be used before Dec. 1. This has been the procedure for as long as Howlett's spokesmen can remember.

Teen-age mothers receive help

by SHERYL JEDLINSKI

Barbara's son was born the day after her 18th birthday, and it has been them against the world ever since.

Her husband deserted her when she was five months pregnant — the last time she received any money or heard from him. She got her divorce without ever talking to him about it.

Her son is 14 months old and lives with Barbara and her grandmother in Arlington Heights. Barbara earns $82 a week babysitting and cleaning house in Barrington, and somehow they make it from week to week.

THE HOSPITAL BILLS for having him still are unpaid, but Barbara sends the hospital installments whenever she can. If she needs a new pair of shoes or if she needs glasses, ends just don't meet that month.

Life has been somewhat easier for Barbara's friend, Maria, who also got pregnant at 17, but chose to give her baby up for adoption rather than keep him herself.

Unmarried, she feared her baby would be severely diabetic like his father and she wouldn't be able to afford insulin for him. She envisioned herself working all day, paying a babysitter most of her earnings and then having no time left for either the baby or herself.

A few months after she gave up her baby, Maria met her husband. Now at 19 she has a 4-month-old daughter and lives in a comfortable apartment with a man who was willing to forget her past and start fresh.

ALTHOUGH BARBARA and Maria chose different solutions to the same problem, both believe they did right by themselves and their babies. They say they wouldn't have been as prepared to make the choice without the aid of classes for pregnant teen-agers offered by high school districts 211 and 214.

The classes are a local response to the growing national problem of teenage pregnancies. In the past 15 years, the number of live babies born to mothers under 16 rose 75 per cent, from 26,000 in 1960 to 46,000 in 1974, according to a report by the National Foundation-March of Dimes.

For teen-age mothers like Barbara who decide to keep their babies, loneliness and finances are constant problems.

Barbara applied for welfare, but was told she didn't qualify. They said she would have to reduce her $2,500 life insurance policy to $1,000 if she wanted to be eligible, but she refused.

"I HAD NO SAVINGS account and the life insurance policy was the only security I had for my son," she says. "As it is, it isn't much security."

She often thinks about going after a better paying job, but worries if she found one she'd have to leave the boy in someone else's care and she doesn't want to do that. Watching her son grow is her life right now and she goes almost nowhere without him.

Social occasions don't come up often, however, and loneliness plagues her even more than finances. She has matured too fast for girls her own age, but at 19, it'll be another two years before she's old enough to join Parents Without Partners or Young Single Parents.

"You become a nowhere person," Barbara says. "Where can you go to meet other single teen-age parents?"

Sometimes Barbara wonders if it wouldn't have been better for both herself and her baby if she had had the courage to give him up for adoption. He'd have two parents rather

DESPITE THE LONELINESS, the financial problems and the overwhelming sense of responsibility associated with being a single teen-age parent, 19-year-old Barbara says she would not give up her 14-month-old son for the world.

Behind-the-scenes work

Dozens keep Randhurst young

"How do you prevent a 14-year-old shopping center from looking 14 years old?"

That is the question Harold J. Carlson, vice president and general manager of the Randhurst Corporation, ponders each day in making sure all goes well at the second largest shopping mall in the North-west suburbs.

Behind the scenes, Carlson and a nine-member staff of accountants, promoters, secretaries and managers work from the center's corporate offices in the lowest level of the spill-level indoor mall.

These people make the Randhurst Shopping Center tick. And these are the people concerned with the daily upkeep of the 100-acre, 85-store facility.

OF RANDHURST'S $13.3-million 1975 budget, $584,000 was spent on general cleaning and maintenance. "Our biggest item is maintenance," Carlson said.

Of the estimated $5,000 it costs to operate the shopping facility each day, about $1,625 is spent on "house-keeping," he said.

It takes a six-man crew six hours, from 10 p.m. to 6 a.m., to scrub and mop the floors. "Our heavy cleaning is done at night," Carlson said. "Painting and general housekeeping chores are done before each heavy holiday season."

"We're trying to encourage our tenants to remodel, redecorate, add new carpeting — to change with the times," Carlson said.

The 6,800 parking spaces at Randhurst also must be swept each day, Carlson said. "We have two tractors and two truck plows to do our own snow removal," he said. "We keep 40 tons of salt on hand."

ASIDE FROM ensuring the shopping center's cleanliness, Carlson said he is confronted with the challenges all landlords face. The two largest problems of the tenant-landlord relationship from a management standpoint are collecting rents and monitoring stores.

"We probably have had more collection problems in the last year than in the prior 10 years," Carlson said. "As far as monitoring our tenants' activities, we must see they open on time and carry the lines of merchandise they should in sufficient depths and variety."

Carlson insists on maintaining a close relationship with Randhurst tenants. He refers to his personalized way of operating as "high visibility management."

He said, "We want to be proud of what everyone in Randhurst is doing."

The Randhurst Corp. owns and operates four shopping centers in addition to Randhurst. They are Lincoln Mall, Matteson, Northwoods Mall, Peoria, Countryside Mall, Palatine, and Backyard, Lincolnshire. Of the five facilities, only Lincoln Mall is bigger than Randhurst.

"IT'S PRETTY MUCH a people business because our operations are totally related to our tenants," Carlson said. "Because we are basically retail oriented, we are involved in what affects retail."

Included among the factors on which Randhurst's livelihood depends, are weather conditions, United Parcel Service strikes, proper functioning of the electronic alarm system, central plant heating and cooling system, and the methods and cost of proper advertising and publicity.

Although Carlson said shopping center management is "a very fascinating business," operating more than one facility like Randhurst is not all that glorious.

Prison chaplain to speak Nov. 20

Chaplain Phil Wagner of the Cook County Correctional Institute will be the guest speaker at a men's prayer breakfast at 8:30 a.m. Nov. 20 at the Scanda House, 1018 Mount Prospect Plaza.

The prayer breakfast is sponsored by the Mount Prospect chapter of the Full Gospel Businessmen's Fellowship. Women also are invited to attend.

For reservations call 991-1209 in Palatine, 537-5822 in Buffalo Grove, 724-2423 in Glenview, or 455-7719 in Franklin Park.

David R. Anderson, former Bible study professor and vice president at Trinity College, will be guest speaker at the group's Nov. 22 dinner at 6:30 p.m. at the Scanda House.

Dinner reservations are required. Music for the program will be provided by the Rev. and Mrs. Jerry Huckle, from the Northwest Assembly of God Church, Mount Prospect.

Strauss to quit as Democratic Party chief

DALLAS (UPI) — Democratic National Chairman Robert S. Strauss, credited with bringing the party from the defeat of George McGovern in 1972 to Jimmy Carter's victory, said Monday he will leave office Jan. 21.

Strauss, chairman since 1972, called his decision not to seek another term "irrevocable."

"I have done this for four years. I'm tired. I'm ready for some one else to go on."

Strauss said he made the announcement because of constant questions about whether he would continue to serve after Carter takes office.

"IT WAS MY intention before very long to call a meeting of the Democratic National Committee," he said. "The primary purpose of the meeting would be to select a new and different chairman. I had discussed this with Governor Carter and his staff and they agreed."

He said he would not seek a post in the Carter administration. He will return to private life in Dallas, where he is a partner in the law firm of Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer and Field.

Strauss announced his decision at a Dallas press conference, saying it "appeared he had done a job."

"There are many things I can do from the private sector to aid the Carter presidency," Strauss said. "I will

Robert S. Strauss

be helping plan the inauguration Jan. 20."

STRAUSS, 59, said he would help Carter and his aides to fill administration posts. "The formation of a new administration means the location of several hundred new persons to fill posts."

He said Carter plans "sweeping" changes during his term.

Strauss said he told Carter three days ago he will remain chairman until one day after Carter's inauguration Jan. 20. In early December, he will call a meeting of the national committee to select a new chairman.

He said he would give Carter his recommendation for his successor.

"GOV. CARTER and I agreed that I would remain through the campaign and that after it I would leave," Strauss said.

Strauss said he was not interested in running for governor nor would he seek an office in the Carter administration.

Strauss said 10 days before last Tuesday's election he was worried Carter might not carry Texas. But, he said, Carter's swing through the state during the last days appeared to make the difference in the outcome.

He praised the president-elect as "compassionate, serious and tough-minded." "He also has one tremendous asset outside of a very high IQ. Jimmy Carter just doesn't believe there are any unsolvable problems," Strauss said. "He just believes problems are solvable."

Students need more practical experience: report

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A new report on education says American high schools have become "social aging vats" in which students spend too much time in academic work and not enough learning to cope with the world outside.

It recommends gradual shifts to classroom days of only two to four hours, freeing students to spend more time at such practical pursuits as observing community government and helping to run their own schools.

"Both as an institution and as a social concept, the American high school will remain the keystone of this nation's educational system," says the 142-page report prepared for the U.S. Office of Education. "However, it requires orderly reform."

AS IT IS NOW, the report said, high schools "have become social 'aging vats' that have isolated adolescents and delayed their opportunity to learn adult roles, work habits and skills."

The report was prepared by a panel of academicians, researchers, school superintendents and students. It was described as the first comprehensive study of high school education in a decade.

They recommended eventually reducing the length of the high school academic day to two to four hours, starting with seniors and working down to other grade levels as opportunities become available for outside study of the arts, media and other fields.

"A two-to-four-hour day is a necessary concentration of effort by the musician, football player, dancer, politician or scientist," the report said. "The present all-day high school is a costly intruder on this need for both time and program variety."

THE REPORT said students freed of classroom time could, among other things, become part of "a permanent group of citizen volunteers . . . whose function should be to observe, investigate and to report publicly on all government operations, not as tattletales but as concerned citizens."

The report also says the schools should give students the chance to try, and fail, in the art of self-government.

"The schools need to be laboratories for error in learning the roles of citizens," the report said. "This means realistic participation in the operation and management of the school."

"It is the only fail-safe institution available for learning the consequences of neglect, venality and the appeals of power. Studied experiments in such consequences should be part of the schools' curriculum in citizenship," it said.

Educators, students say shorter day not answer

by HOLLY HANSON

While local educators adamantly support the idea of sending students into the community to gain practical experience as a necessary part of their education, a U.S. Office of Education report recommending a gradual shortening of the school day received mixed reactions.

"Certainly it isn't an 8-to-4 day anymore," said Roderick McLennan, associate superintendent for instructional services for High School Dist. 214. "But I really don't see how we could change the hours and provide the courses that students want to take."

About 1,000 to 2,000 students participate in Dist. 214's community resource program each year, he said, and each of the district's eight buildings has its own community resources person who places students in a practical setting in the community.

"Every course ought to relate to a career," he said, explaining that chemistry students have gone to Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, to work with chemists there while social studies students have worked with children in local elementary schools.

EVEN HIGH SCHOOL students, who might be expected to look favorably on the chance to spend less time sitting in the classroom, seemed unenthusiastic about the shorter day.

"I like it (school) the way it is," said Prospect High School sophomore Art Granzler. "We're allowed to do that (work in the community) now. Next year, or the year after that, there's an electronics work-study course I can take."

Other students questioned the entire program, asking, "What happens to school activities?" "Would you get to choose a program for yourself?" and "How much homework is there?"

In High School Dist. 207 schools, students have the opportunity to visit local political candidates, tour art museums, perform in choral groups and bands and work with private industries in the community, said Michael Myers, assistant superintendent of instruction.

"People in the community want to help," he said. "But their first priority is to themselves; to earn a living. Then, it's to help the company make a profit." Industries will hire and train students, he said, as long as a succession of student workers helps the business.

"Basically, we support having kids learn in the community, but there has to be a balance," he said. Spending only two to four hours in the classroom "sounds kind of low to me," he said.

INFORMAL VOCATIONAL counseling, career-related clubs and work-study programs help students in High School Dist. 211 learn outside the school, said Gerald Chapman, assistant to the superintendent.

"Each school has a vocational counselor who coordinates a student's interests with someone in the community," he said.

The district also gives students the chance to work with cosmetologists, assist in the early education program in a local elementary district and take physical education classes off-campus "to let them see what opportunities are available," he said.

Although Dist. 211 planned to develop a professional careers program with Dist. 214, which would have allowed students to observe and assist community professionals, a state aid cut forced the program to be cancelled, he said.

"Although there ought to be a way to get more kids out into the community, two to four hours in school — especially two hours — seems less than desirable," Chapman said. "I don't know what they (the U.S. Office of Education) are recommending us to do that we're not doing."

Dist. 21 to help parents teach reading skills

"Motivation to Read" is the theme of activities scheduled by Wheeling-Buffalo Grove, Dist. 21 in honor of American Education Week, Nov. 15-19.

A workshop for parents on "What Parents Should Look for in Children's Literature" will be conducted at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the cafeteria of Buffalo Grove High School, 1101 W. Dundee Rd., Buffalo Grove.

Bill Halleran, an educational consultant, will help parents learn how to choose books and develop techniques to motivate children in reading.

Reservations for the workshop may be made by contacting Irving School Principal Dennis Carpenter, at 394-2212.

SCHOOLS SERVING Mount Prospect students will feature the following programs during the week:

• Frost School, 1805 Aspen Dr., Mount Prospect, invites parents to visit classrooms and the learning center.

• Stevenson School, 1375 S. Wolf Rd., Wheeling, invites parents to visit their child's classroom during the reading period from 9:15 to 11 a.m. daily. Intermediate students will participate in an essay contest on the importance of education. The winner will receive a certificate of recognition and an invitation to lunch at McDonald's with the principal.

Stevenson also will hold a program for parents from 7:30 to 8:30 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 18. The program will include a presentation on the Title I Reading program and the essay contest winner will read his or her essay.

Harold Carlson manages a $100 million a year business — Randhurst Shopping Center.

Holy Daze Bazaar slated Wednesday

Community Presbyterian Church, 407 N. Main St., will sponsor Holy Daze Bazaar 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Wednesday.

More than 600 items will be for sale and a special painting will be raffled. Baby sitting service will be offered for 50 cents per child.

Mall a top-notch village citizen, taxpayer

What once was 100 acres of cornfields now is Mount Prospect's biggest taxpayer.

Randhurst is a shopping center, which, when built 14 years ago, was touted as the largest indoor mall of its kind in the world. It is named for Rand and Elmhurst roads, two major streets forming its southern and western perimeters.

But what does the split-level center — with its 85 shops, restaurants and department stores — really mean to the village?

"It's the largest source of revenue for the village," said Harold J. Carlson, vice president and general manager of the Randhurst Corp.

Richard L. Jesse, Mount Prospect finance director, agrees. "It has a big impact on the financial income of the village," Jesse said. "The sales tax generated from Randhurst is a major concern at budget time. It's one of the largest line items of revenue for the general operations of the village."

CARLSON SAID Randhurst's 1975

sales and real estate tax bills sent about $1.2 million in taxes to the village. "That represents about 11 percent of the total (1976-77) budget (of approximately $9 million)," Carlson said. "And the figures continue to grow all the time. Where would that come from if we weren't here?"

Jesse said there would be certain cutbacks in village services in the absence of the largest shopping facility in Mount Prospect which records annual sales of at least $100 million.

"Our total operation would have to be reduced in terms of expenditures to compensate if the installation was not there," he said. "There would be the possibility of an increase in taxes to provide the needed services if the facility were not there."

While Randhurst's daily function is to accommodate thousands of consumers from throughout the Northwest suburbs and Chicago, the center also is a customer of Mount Prospect. Carlson said the shopping facility annually uses about $30,000 worth of village water.

It would take about 194 single-family homes to generate the same amount of tax revenue each year as Randhurst. "While our tax rate is the same as the homeowners', we do things for ourselves that the village must do for the homeowner," Carlson said.

LIGHTING, MAINTENANCE and security are among services the corporation provides for itself. "We try to minimize village police efforts through our own security force," Carlson said.

In addition to being probably the village's most valuable asset, Randhurst also employs 2,000 persons, 800 of whom live in Mount Prospect.

On a typical 9 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. weekday, Randhurst attracts nearly 18,000 persons. About 30,000 customers visit the center during the weekend.

"Our biggest traffic day historically is the day after Thanksgiving," Carlson said. "The largest crowd we ever had in one day was 75,000."

Mount Prospect-Prospect Heights

Prospect Hts. Dist. 23

A panel discussion on special education, developmental kindergarten and divisional classes led by Assistant Supt. Gerald McGovern has been rescheduled for 7:30 p.m. today at Eisenhower School, Schoenbeck and McDonald roads, Prospect Heights.

Elk Grove Township Dist. 59

The Dempster Junior High School PTA will sponsor "Port-A-Plant II" at 8 p.m., Wednesday in the school cafeteria, 420 W. Dempster St., Mount Prospect.

A question and answer session will follow a brief lecture and plants will be sold. The program is open to the public. A 25-cent donation is asked.

High School Dist. 214

Hersey High School's Service Over Self club is sponsoring a month-long canned food drive. The drive, already in progress, will run through Dec. 10.

SOS, a group of 200 students who donate their time and energy to aid less fortunate members of the community, have set this year's goal at 6,000 cans and $500 in donations. The money is earmarked for the purchase of 300 turkeys to be distributed to the community's needy, the canned goods will go to St. Joseph's Old People's Home, to 150 community families and to the American Indian Center.

Food goods can be deposited at the school's main office, 1900 E. Thomas St., Arlington Heights, or pick-up service may be arranged for large donations by calling, 259-8500, ext. 72.

Rock concert security meeting topic

Operators of the Randhurst Twin Ice Arena, concert promoters and Mount Prospect officials tonight will try to reach an agreement on security measures to allow one last rock concert in the village by Jan. 12.

The meeting begins at 8 p.m. in the village hall, 100 S. Emerson St.

Trustee E. F. Richardson, chairman of the fire and police committee, said the purpose of the meeting is to discuss security requests made in October by Fire Chief Lawrence A. Palitz and Police Chief Ralph J. Dooley.

"We will try to come to terms where our chiefs will be satisfied," Richardson said. "In order to allow another concert or the continuation of concerts at Randhurst."

PAIRITZ AND DONEY have said fire safety standards at the arena and security provided by arena operators J. Emil Anderson & Son are inadequate.

As a result of a disturbance at an Oct. 10 concert where one Mount Prospect patrolman was injured and several youths were arrested, the chiefs want stepped up security measures. Arena operators and Blaz Productions, concert promoters in the village since last January, already have said they will terminate their one-year contract Jan. 12. Blaz officials said they have been permitted by J. Emil Anderson to sponsor one last rock performance through mid-July rather than the original three concerts scheduled under contract terms.

A date is expected to be scheduled for the final rock concert if officials tonight can agree to increased security at the arena.
